PASTOR IS ARRESTED AS GIRL'S POISONER

The Rev. Mr. Richeson Taken from Fiancee's Home, Charged with Killing Miss Linnell.

DRUGGIST, FRIEND, GAVE CLUE

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 20.—The Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson, pastor of the Immanuel Baptist Church, Cambridge, was arrested today, charged with the murder of Avis Linnell, the young music student of Hyannisport, Mass., who, it is alleged, had thought herself betrothed to him, and who died, poisoned by cyanide of potassium, last Saturday night at the Young Woman's Christian Association. The arrest was made at 7:35 o'clock this morning, and the prisoner, after being arraigned, was committed to jail to await a hearing on Oct. 31, the day on which he expected to marry Miss Violet Edmands of Chestnut Hill.

The young clergyman's name was brought into the case after the girl's death became known. The fact that he had taken from her the ring which she believed was a token of her betrothal, and that when he was notified of her tragic end he refused to go to the place where she died, caused much criticism among those acquainted with the circumstances surrounding the girl's death.

William Hahn, a Newton Centre druggist, voluntarily informed the police late last night that Richeson purchased a quantity of cyanide of potassium from him on Oct. 10, saying that he wanted it to kill a dog. Mr. Hahn's store is a gathering place for the students of the Newton Theological Institution, and the proprietor was well acquainted with the Rev. Mr. Richeson. Evidence of this is the fact that on Oct. 11 he received an invitation to the wedding of Richeson and Miss Edmands.

According to Mr. Hahn's story, Richeson came to his store on the night of Tuesday, Oct. 10, and intimated that he had merely come to Newton for a social call. He conversed for some time and spoke of his wedding, which was to take place on Oct. 31 at Newton Centre. Just previous to leaving he told Mr. Hahn that he had a dog at home that he wished to dispose of, and asked for something that would kill the animal. The druggist expressed surprise at the statement that the clergyman owned a dog, but Richeson said that he kept the animal at his room in Cambridge.

Wanted a "Quick" Poison.

Hahn advised him to use chloroform, but Richeson declared it left a disagreeable odor, and that it took much trouble in its use. He asked for a poison that would act more quickly, and Hahn then said he would give him some cyanide of potassium.

Enough of the compound to kill three dogs was placed in a wide-mouthed bottle, and the druggist advised Richeson to be extremely careful in its use, adding that even the empty bottle would be dangerous if thrown away carelessly. He told the police that Richeson than asked for more of the poison, so as to be sure to kill the dog quickly, and the druggist then weighed out enough more to make the entire quantity enough to kill ten people.

As Richeson was leaving the store to catch a car he told Hahn to be sure and attend the wedding. He also requested that the druggist maintain secrecy in regard to his buying the poison.

"This may seem mysterious to you," was his language, according to Hahn, "but can you keep a secret? I haven't bought any cyanide here. Keep it to yourself."

When the clergyman's name was first mentioned in connection with the girl's death Hahn realized that the transaction in his store might have some bearing in the matter, but he kept silent for a day or two, and then conferred with his attorney, E. B. Bishop, with the result that the police were notified.

The arrest was made at the home of M. Grant Edmands, father of Miss Violet Edmands, the clergyman's fiancée, in Devon Street, in the Chestnut Hill section of Brookline. Richeson had remained there in seclusion since Sunday.

The house, which is in an aristocratic suburb, had been surrounded by police in command of Deputy Supt. Watts and Capt. Dugan since 1 o'clock this morning, for immediately upon learning of Hahn's story Watts had resolved upon action. He did not stop for a warrant, and, accordingly, as the members of the Edmands household refused to notice the repeated bell pulls, telephone calls, and shouts, he was forced to abandon his first intention of forcing an entrance and to wait until daybreak. Then Watts succeeded in obtaining an interview with Mr. Edmands, father of Mr. Richeson's fiancée, and broke the news of the purchase of cyanide. Mr. Edmands led the way to the room in which the pastor had passed a restless night, and the clergyman, trembling, gaunt, and unshaven, was arrested, charged with the murder.

Farewell to His Fiancee.

After a brief talk with his lawyer, Mr. Edmands said that he had been advised to make no protest against the arrest of the pastor. Preparations were made to leave the house and enter the taxicab outside for the trip to Boston and the arraignment of Richeson.

Then came the most dramatic moment of the arrest. Richeson turned to the members of the Edmands family, the parents, his fiancée, and her sister, Miss Rose Edmands, to take farewell. They had been his stanchest supporters. In their home he had sought and found a secure refuge, when the storm of investigation and criticism broke after the death of his former sweetheart. They had shielded him from questions, and had taken care of him when his health showed signs of failing under the strain. Through it all they had never questioned his innocence. Nor did they now.

His leave-taking from Mr. Edmands, Mrs. Edmands, and Miss Rose was simple enough, a few words of gratitude for the aid they had given him. Then came the parting from the girl whom he had expected to marry within two weeks.

She was ill in bed, unnerved by the shock. Richeson walked slowly to the bedside, and as soon as he bent over to carress Miss Edmunds she burst into tears, even as she partly raised herself up and threw her arms about his neck. She said nothing, but clung to him convulsively.

"Don't cry, dear," said Richeson in a low, soothing voice, as he gently stroked her hair. "Don't cry. Everything will be all right."

The brief moment of saying farewell to the girl appeared to unnerve him more than anything else. As he left her he stepped forward toward the officers, and buttoning his long coat with nervous fingers, moved toward the door. Watts and Dugan took either arm, and the three went to the cab and were whirled away toward the city.

Pemberton Square, where Police Headquarters and the Court House are both located, was packed with people when the prisoner and his captors arrived, and a large force of police found it no easy

BLAMES DIXIE IV.'S CAPTAIN.

Justice Charges Burnham with Negligence and Cowardice in Bell Inquest.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Oct. 20.—Criminal negligence and cowardice are charged against Frederick K. Burnham in the findings of Dr. R. A. Toms, Justice of the Peace of Tonawanda, who conducted the inquest into the death of Harold W. Bell, one of the persons fatally injured when Capt. Burnham's motorboat, the Dixie IV., ran ashore while competing in championship races here on Sept. 16.

Dr. Toms finds that the death of Mr. Bell resulted from the deviation of the Dixie IV. from her course, due to the propellers revolving at different speeds, and that the accident was owing to the entire absence of signals between Capt. Burnham and his engineers.

The findings accuse Capt. Burnham of "criminal negligence in not signaling to his engineers to stop the boat," and of "cowardice in deserting his post at the steering wheel and jumping overboard when the boat was within 300 feet of the shore and might have been brought under control."

When informed last night of the above findings in regard to the wreck of the Dixie, prominent yachtsmen of this city were inclined to view the verdict as a wrongful one, and held that the charge of criminal negligence should be laid against the management of the races, which had caused the turning point adjacent to the scene of the accident to be placed within 400 yards of the shore. One follower of the sport said:

"It is a well known fact that Mr. Burnham is a capable motorboat helmsman. It has been shown that as soon as he found his boat unmanageable, due possibly to a submerged log getting mixed up with the steering gear of the Dixie, he immediately shut off one of the engines, and before he could stop the other, the boat was piled up on the rocks.

"Mr. Burnham attempted to warn the people on shore, and he did not desert his boat until after two of the crew leaped overboard twenty feet from shore, and until he was hurled from the wheel upon the impact of the boat, which leaped entirely out of water."

NO DAMAGES FOR DEAD BOY.

Verdict Upset Because Jury Wasn't Instructed About Negligence.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court set aside yesterday a verdict of $5,000 in favor of Mrs. Antonio Marius, a widow, for the death of her son, Clarence, 8 years old. The verdict was returned in the Supreme Court by a jury sitting under Justice Bijur, against the Motor Delivery Company. The boy was killed in West 124th Street by a motor mail wagon, while he was playing ball in the street. The opinion of the Appellate Court criticised Justice Bijur's charge, saying:

"In the charge the court instructed the jury that it was the duty of the plaintiff to show that the defendant was negligent, and that the boy was free from contributory negligence, but failed to give the jury any instructions as to what constituted negligence, or to give the jury a rule by which they could test the conduct of the boy to determine whether or not the boy was guilty of contributory negligence."

The Appellate Division agrees that the court was right in telling the jury that the boy could not be held accountable as strictly as a grown person for care in the street, but that he should have acted "as a reasonable and prudent boy of his age, and understanding would have conducted himself under like circumstances."

SAYS SUFFRAGETTES STOLE IT

Members of the so-called Cleveland Democracy who attended a meeting of that organization in the Hawthorne Building in West 125th Street last night were mightily stirred when one of the members, James M. Livien, who said he represented the Thirty-first Assembly District, informed the meeting that the Suffragettes had stolen the Cleveland Democracy's emblem, "the rooster rampant." Mr. Livien pronounced the theft an outrage.

Before the members had had time to cool down a resolution that the Cleveland Democracy support the Fusion ticket was voted down. Instead a resolution was adopted, declaring that the Cleveland Democracy, because of being ignored by the Fusion forces, will take no official part in the campaign, but will leave it to the members to act as they individually think best.

The membership of the organization is not large, but it managed to land some good places after the last Fusion campaign, in which the Cleveland Democracy took an active part.

FIND OF SEA ELEPHANTS.

Expedition Discovers Species, Thought Extinct, in Lower California.

Special to The New York Times.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Oct. 20.—Pingree I. Osborn, who has been acting as guide to the expedition of the American Museum of Natural History of New York, returned to-day from Lower California with information of the discovery on the island of Guadalupe of several herds of sea elephants of a variety hitherto unknown except to archaeologists.

"It has long been supposed this species of sea elephants was extinct, but we not only saw big herds of them on the island, but shot two," he said. "They are enormous animals, and shaggy and apparently harmless. The largest herd contained at least fifty animals. The largest of the two we shot was twenty-one feet in length and stood more than eighteen feet high."

The explorers of the little-known peninsula of Lower California have had at their disposal the U. S. S. Albatross with which to examine the coast line and adjacent islands. The exploration has already covered a period of six months, and the Albatross, which has gone to San Francisco to dispose of its cargo, is laden with the bones and skins of many hitherto unknown animals.

J. Q. A. WARD'S WILL UPHELD.

Sculptor's Sister Loses Her Second Contest—Widow Gets Everything.

After a trial lasting ten days before Supreme Court Justice Platzek, the jury in the contest over the will of John Q. A. Ward, the sculptor, returned yesterday a verdict upholding the will. The document gave all of Ward's estate to his widow, Mrs. Rachel M. O. Smith Ward.

The contest before Justice Platzek was the second attack made on the will by Eleanor Ward of Urbana, Ohio, sister of the sculptor. Miss Ward was first defeated in the Surrogate's Court, and she took her fight to the Supreme Court. Miss Ward, who, the evidence showed, had received substantial and steady gifts from her brother during his lifetime, attacked his mental capacity to make a will, and charged that his wife had exerted undue influence upon him.

ROOSEVELT UNAFRAID TO OPPOSE JUDGES

No More Afraid, He Says, Than to Oppose Labor Unions When They're Dead Wrong.

AND HE'S FOR THE UNIONS

Suffragettes Create a Storm at the Close of His Carnegie Hall Speech —Auditorium Packed.

There were not enough tickets to go around among those who went to Carnegie Hall last night to hear Col. Roosevelt talk about the conservation of women and children under the auspices of the Civic Forum and the Child's Welfare League. After all the seats had been sold and chairs had been put in the isles of the auditorium the box office was closed and several hundred men and women were turned away.

The speech was not on the whole so much about women and children as it was about Col. Roosevelt's "enemies" and "critics," and the Judges of the various courts who he flayed time and time again in his written manuscript, and in special interpolations, put in to emphasize his objections. The women and children he discussed figured principally in judicial decisions upon laws passed for the regulation of working hours for women. This gave the Colonel an opportunity to say what he thought about the Judges who made the decisions he discussed.

Some men went there to question the Colonel at an opportune time. They had been promised a chance at the opening of the Colonel's speech, but were denied it when the speech was done, the reason given being that the hour was rather late for a long debate. Before the final dismissal of the audience by a wave from Col. Roosevelt's hands, several ushers had started forward with questions, the rule having already been announced that no questions except those presented in writing would be considered.

Suffragettes Make a Noise.

When it became obvious to Miss Elizabeth Freeman, an American girl who has worked among British suffragettes, that she was not going to have the promised chance to heckle the ex-President, she crowded forward with a group of her suffragette sisters. They utilized chairs from the press tables and the tables themselves in getting to the stage, and then they shouted and trilled, "Votes for Women!" "Votes! Votes! Votes for Women!" The Colonel's retreat from the stage, surrounded by stalwart committeemen, was made in a din of the suffragette cries.

One woman worker for the ballots had a place on the stand close to Col. Roosevelt. She was Mrs. A. Arthur Alfred Brooks, President of the Gotham Club. As soon as he had announced that he was finished with his audience and it could go without waiting to hear his answer to questions, she stepped toward him, took a large rosette of white ribbon from her breast, pinned it on his breast, and left dangling down from it a ribbon streamer bearing the legend, "Women Want the Ballot."

Several men and a score of women pressed close to Col. Roosevelt to put their questions in his hands, but all were pressed back by committeemen. One question, said to have been submitted by Samuel Untermyer, read:

"Do you believe in the recall of Judges?"

Principally Suffrage Questions.

Most of the other questions had to do with Col. Roosevelt's attitude toward women's suffrage. While he was very explicit in announcing his "complete belief in the principle of trades unions—especially trades unions for women," he remained silent about the question of votes for women, and he did not say what should be done with the Judges whom he bitterly assailed.

"Let me say in conclusion," were his final words, "that what I say is not radicalism, it is conservatism of the highest order." The end of the meeting was an appeal from Elgin R. S. Gould, the meeting's Chairman, addressed especially to the newspapers. It besought the editors not to distort, as the Colonel said he knew in advance they would, what he said conservatively into something which did not seem conservative, but radical and revolutionary.

When Col. Roosevelt started his speech he faced the audience with a voluminous stack of manuscript. As he finished with each page he let it fall from his hand. When he had concluded with his critics of the past, and those he felt sure would be his future critics on account of what he was saying, he was standing in a litter of manuscript.

Warms Up to His Subject.

Of constructive legislation the Colonel urged that a bureau of child's welfare be added to the Government departments at Washington, and that a State commission be appointed in this State to collect such data in support of laws already passed and declared unconstitutional that no Judges will again dare to apply "the mischievous reasoning" which has attached to their conduct in the past.

"It is folly," declared the Colonel, as he brought his right hand down in a smashing blow upon his left, "to say that there is any direct cure-all for the evils that beset us. In this country we have one set of men—entirely well-meaning men—who insist that our system is as perfect as human nature is capable of making it. Another set declare that if capitalistic exploitation of the masses can be stopped, then our troubles will all be cured. I wish the apostles of both schools could look across the Pacific to China, where the worst plagues of famine and death have been in districts where there has been no capitalism and no capitalistic exploitation. We must work separately making war against every set of evils and applying to each separate set the remedy most adaptable to it.

"Socialism—the cure-all Socialism—is a quack remedy. I'm saying just what I mean. It is a quack remedy, I want you to understand that. I don't mean there are no dangers in capitalism. I mean we cannot afford to rely on one set of virtues or charge all our troubles to one set of ills. You know you may have a very courageous and honorable boy in your household, and if he happens to have a cantankerous disposition he can make quite as much trouble as if he did not have the admirable virtue of courage.

A Child Bill That Failed.

Col. Roosevelt referred to a child labor bill, which had been introduced in Congress "five years ago when I was President." "The chief reason why this bill failed of passage," he said, turning his back to the audience and facing the fifty-odd committtemen gathered on the stage, "was that it appealed to no great special interest. Every man who had an interest in exploiting child labor made his opposition to that bill felt. And you know I wasn't always able to persuade Congress to look at things as I looked at them. I ask you who are here to make the general interest in the conservation of children your special interest, and translate your passive approval of what I say into active, burning support of this measure, as it will be introduced again at the coming session. It is a scandal to the American Nation that our National Government has proved so supine in doing

GIRL IS ATTACKED LIKE AGNES WAUGH

Dragged Into Lot in Blythebourne Section of Brooklyn—Fights Assailant.

HE MAY BE ONE OF A GANG

Resembled Man Implicated in Sopaner Case—He Escapes Pursuit—Latest Victim, Beatrice Goldberg.

Another girl was attacked last night in one of the outlying districts of Brooklyn. The manner of the attack was similar to that made on Miss Agnes Waugh a few days ago, and that which Miss Alma Sopaner suffered late in August. The man escaped, but from his description the police believe that he may have been one of the three who attacked Miss Sopaner.

Frank Brach, now under indictment for the attack on Miss Waugh, was indicted also for that made on Miss Sopaner, and the possible connection of the assailant of last night with those who made the first attack of this kind on Miss Sopaner has given rise to the theory in the minds of the police that there may be a gang of young ruffians banded together in this practice.

The victim of the attack last night was Miss Beatrice Goldberg, a stenographer in Manhattan, who lives with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Goldberg, at 1,072 Fifty-eighth Street, Brooklyn. This is not more than a mile from the home of Miss Waugh in Eighty-third Street, Bay Ridge, and not far from where Miss Sopaner was attacked in Thirty-eighth Street.

The girl had alighted from a train of the West End line at the station at Fifty-eighth Street and New Utrecht Avenue just before 7 o'clock and started walking toward her home, about four blocks away, in Fifty-eighth Street. The neighborhood is a sparsely settled one, and it was dark.

The girl's home is near Tenth Avenue, and she had proceeded along Fifty-eighth Street, across Twelfth Avenue, and was nearing Eleventh, about a block from her home, when a young man, looking, the girl said later, like a Pole or a Swede, sprang from behind a tree and struck her in the face.

The girl fell to the sidewalk screaming. Her assailant kicked her about the body and, falling on her, beat her with his fists. She lost consciousness, and then the young man began to drag her into the bushes which line the sidewalk.

There are no houses much nearer than Miss Goldberg's home, and vacant lots are on each side of the street. The youth had dragged the girl into the lot when she regained consciousness. Recalling the attack on Miss Waugh, the girl was frightened almost out of her wits, but her terror lent her additional strength.

She struck and kicked at the man, shouting meantime at the top of her lungs, and biting his hand when he tried to clap it over her mouth. She was fighting fiercely when she felt the man drop her and saw him start off on a run. An instant afterward she heard the pounding of feet and saw several men racing after the fugitive. They had heard her cries and had come from neighboring houses. Her assailant had seen them before they saw him and had got a good lead.

In the darkness—there are few street lights in the neighborhood—the fugitive made off, dodging into the darkest spots and running for the less settled parts in the neighborhood. Presently he shook off his pursuers, and after a fruitless search of the neighborhood, the men returned.

They found Miss Goldberg nearly senseless. The girl had not the strength to get home, and the men who had driven off her assailant now helped her to her home, probably less than 300 yards away. Her parents summoned Dr. Herbert Hansen of 1,464 Forty-eighth Street. The physician found that the girl's body was a mass of bruises from the kicking and beating she had received, and that her face and throat were bruised from the man's hands. Otherwise she was unhurt, and the doctor said she would be all right as soon as she had recovered from the soreness caused by the beating.

The police were notified and the reserves of the Fourth Avenue Station were sent to the neighborhood with instructions to make a thorough search of the vicinity. Though they spent several hours at the task they found no one who resembled Miss Goldberg's assailant. Detectives Fay, Dittman, and Hyland stayed in the neighborhood all night, however, in the hope that the man might be in hiding and might endeavor to escape after he thought the first hurried search had been made for him and perhaps abandoned.

Miss Goldberg retained a very good recollection of her assailant and gave the detectives a full description. She said he was about 5 feet 8 inches in height and weighed perhaps 180 pounds, being very stockily built. He was clean shaven and wore a dark suit of clothes, with a soft, black shirt and no collar. He had on a derby hat.

Though the police never were able to get a clear description of Miss Sopaner's assailants, they recalled that one of them was described as stocky and in some other ways fits the description given by Miss Goldberg. That there actually is a gang of these young assailants of women the police now believe is more than a probability.

FED MONEY TO HORSE.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 20.—William Hobson, formerly a cabman, was so glad to see a horse which he once owned that he drew a handful of bills from his pocket and, holding them under the animal's nose, exclaimed:

"Here, Billy, you saved my life once; now I'll repay you."

When arraigned in the Harrison Street Court to-day, charged with disorderly conduct, Judge Walker asked Hobson why he was trying to feed money to the horse.

"I guess I was drunk, your Honor," replied Hobson. "I drew $50 out of the bank yesterday and invested in a few drinks. Then I saw Billy, a horse I drove to my cab in the days before taxicabs were thought of.

"Billy was hitched to a truck and looked so forlorn that I took pity on him. I thought I had money, and there he was being driven by a man who didn't know what a good, intelligent horse he was. Unthinkingly, I must have reached into my pocket and offered him my roll of bills. He saved my life once when I nearly drove into the river when the Clark Street bridge was open."

"I will have to fine you $1," said Judge Walker. "See that you take better care of your money after this."

EXPLODING BOILER BORES UNDER STREET

EIGHT PERSONS ARE HURT

Ninth Avenue Elevated Damaged by Blast in Greenwich Street—Roar Startles Neighborhood.

Greenwich Street, between Beach and Hubert Streets, was empty at midnight last night, except for Policeman Joseph Wood of the Leonard Street Station, who was on a fixed post at Greenwich and Hubert Streets, when suddenly there was a tremendous explosion. Buildings for blocks around rocked on their foundations. The report was like that of a discharge of artillery.

Wood saw the entire lower front of the Greenwich Cold Storage Building, a six-story brick structure at 402 and 404 Greenwich Street, on the west side, about midway between Beach and Hubert Streets, tumble outward. At the same moment the sidewalk in front of the building rose, a broken mass of stone and mortar shot into the air as if spouted from a volcano, and settled back a heap of wreckage in the middle of the street.

Wood started for a fire alarm box, but he had moved scarcely a step when he saw the sidewalk, from the wrecked building all the way to the Hubert Street corner, on which he stood, rise upward as though some huge mole was working its way toward Hubert Street with tremendous speed. Suddenly there was a second crash, and the sidewalk, almost at the policeman's feet, was ripped open. Up from it shot half of the boiler of the cold storage plant. It was this which had exploded, and which, like a mole, had traversed the cellerways beneath the sidewalk all the way from the cold storage building to the corner, 200 feet away, smashing through half a dozen partitioning walls in its course.

When it struck the street, solid and without an excavation beneath it such as is under the sidewalk, the boiler burst upwards through the flagstones, half of its eighteen feet of length projecting upward into the air. From the boiler flew nearly 200 steel tubes, the flues of the boiler, each eighteen feet long and as thick as a man's wrist. One struck Wood a glancing blow in the right leg, snapping it under him. Others were hurled against the houses across the street.

The first explosion had wrecked the basement of the cold storage plant. The fusillade of boiler tubes, discharged with the speed of big gun projectiles, smashed their way into the building across Hubert Street, a seven-story tenement occupied by thirty-eight families with a saloon on the ground floor. Before the last of them, its energy spent, had settled to the pavement or stuck fast in whatever sturdy substance it had encountered, eight persons had been injured, seven of them so badly that they were taken to the hospital. They were:

BEHAN, WILLIAM, Jr.; lacerations of the face.

LINSKEY, THOMAS, proprietor of saloon at Greenwich and Hubert Streets; bruises of the body and cuts on forehead.

MURPHY, DANIEL, 2,794 Eighth Avenue; laceration of left eye and internal injuries.

WALLER, GEORGE, 282 West 119th Street; lacerated hip.

Two Engineers Arrested.

What caused the explosion has not been ascertained. The engineers of the buildings, Mulligan and Cavanaugh, were arrested, however, by Detectives Herrick and Keating of the Leonard Street Station, charged with criminal negligence. As nearly as could be learned last night, their arrests were the outcome of information gleaned by the detectives from Samuel Solomon, a negro living at 495 Seventh Avenue, who is employed in the cold storage plant, and was at work in the place when the explosion occurred.

Solomon and several other men were on the fifth floor throughout the evening, and said that Cavanaugh, who came to work in the plant for the first time yesterday afternoon, made frequent trips to their floor inquiring about the plant and finally asked that a man be detailed to assist him in turning a valve which had stuck. Solomon said that his foreman, a negro named Jackson, had sent him to help the engineer and with the latter he had gone to the engine room.

"Dat valve sure stuck," said Solomon afterward. "I remember trying to turn it, and then I disremember anything else till I found mahself on the sidewalk rubbing of mahself."

How Solomon got out no one else seemed to know. The big negro was bruised, but he seemed otherwise unhurt. He was in a haze, however, over the accident and his escape, and could give no more information as to what had happened in the engine room.

Whatever may have caused it, the explosion was one of the worst which has ever occurred in this city, according to the police and firemen, who said last night that had it been daytime hundreds of persons must have been injured or killed by the flying débris.

When the sidewalk rose up flagstones six and eight feet long by as many inches thick, weighing hundreds of pounds apiece, were tossed into the air like bits of cardboard. Some were sent whirling across the street, to bring up against the warehouses which line Greenwich Street there

Gas and Water Mains Broken.

The explosion tore open a gas main almost directly in front of the building and the escaping gas took fire, leaping upward like a red fountain. A piece of one of the boiler tubes struck a high pressure water main at Hubert and Greenwich Streets and started a flood of water pouring along the gutters and over the sidewalk. It also smashed an ammonia plant in the cold storage building and the suffocating fumes of this were sent rising through the building.

It is not known now just how many men were in the building, though it is believed that all have been accounted for. Five men, all negroes of the gang to which Solomon was attached, were at work on the fifth floor. They said afterward that when the explosion came they could hear the elevator blown up to the roof, where its cables were smashed, and it crashed back to the lower floor. They

BROOK'S COMET BRIGHTENS.

Head of Second Magnitude, Tail Twenty Degrees Long.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 20.—The brightness of Brook's comet has steadily increased in twenty-four hours, the head of the comet being of the second magnitude and the tail twenty degrees long, according to a telegram received at the Harvard Observatory to-day from Dr. Joel Stebbins of the observatory at Urbana, Ill.

Letters and photographs received at the observatory from Prof. Frost, director of the Yerkes Observatory, concerning Beljawskij's comet show it to have a tail ten degrees in length. Three decrees of the tail may be seen with an ordinary fieldglass.

The position of the vessel is given as latitude 37.30, longitude 75.20. The mainshaft of the steamer is reported broken. The dispatch stated that the vessel's owners had been notified by wireless of her plight.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—The revenue cutter Onondaga, which intercepted the distress signals of the disabled Clyde Line steamer George W. Clyde, has gone to the assistance of the vessel off Cape Charles Lightship.

Twenty-four persons were injured last night in a head-on collision between two Yonkers trolley cars in Yonkers Avenue, near Shaft No. 3 of the New York Aqueduct.

There is a sharp curve and incline in Yonkers Avenue, as it nears Seminary Avenue, and neither motorman could see each other until it was too late to prevent a collision. One said he applied the brake, but the track was slippery and the wheels slid.

Mounted Policeman Aaron Morton saw the crash and summoned ambulances from St. John's and St. Joseph's Hospitals, bringing all the doctors at liberty. All of the passengers were thrown to the floors and hurt, but all but two were able to go home after having their injuries dressed. Harry Aretzky's right leg was severely hurt, and Peter Doyle of 11 Van Buren Street was cut. Neither motorman was injured seriously.

TAXI KILLS ICE CO. PRESIDENT

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Oct. 20.—John Moore, President of the Consolidated Ice Company of Philadelphia, was struck by a taxicab as he stepped from a trolley car at Atlantic and Arkansas Avenues today and received injuries from which he died two hours later.

Mr. Moore, who was 60 years old, had walked around the rear of the trolley car toward the Reading Railroad station when the taxicab, driven by John Meyers, struck him with such force that he was hurled to the street unconscious. The chauffeur brought his machine to a standstill and returned to the victim's side as quickly as possible.

With the assistance of Policeman Martini, Meyers lifted Mr. Moore into the machine and made a quick run to a hospital, where the injured man was placed upon the operating table. An examination disclosed that he had suffered concussion of the brain.

After leaving Mr. Moore at the hospital the chauffeur was ordered to drive to Police Headquarters, where he is now held to await the verdict of the Coroner's jury.

A MUNICIPAL NEWSPAPER.

Special to The New York Times.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 20.—The newspaper under municipal management is at hand if the initiative petition put forth today by George H. Dunlop, former Mayor of Hollywood, is signed by 5 per cent. of the qualified electors and carried at the general election, Dec. 5. The petition is being generally signed, and there is no doubt that it will come to a vote. It provides for the appointment of a municipal newspaper commission, which is to supervise a manager and a secretary, who are to manage the "necessary employes, assistants, and laborers."

The commission must name the paper The Los Angeles Municipal News. They must mail it at 1 cent a copy to any subscriber who pays six months in advance, or they must give a copy free to every qualified elector when he calls for it, but they may make arrangements for further free distribution. The paper is to be published weekly or oftener. The commission shall have full charge of receiving advertising and fixing the rates.

"In the publication of all news it shall endeavor to publish the facts with the strictest available accuracy, without bias."

For the establishment of this enterprise the ordinance appropriates $18,000 to finance it until June 30, 1912, and requires at least $36,000 annually thereafter. The income from subscriptions and advertising is also to go to the newspaper fund.

CHINESE REBELS GAIN VICTORY

Fear That Imperial Defeat May Cause General Rush to Rebel Standard.

BATTLE NEAR HANKOW

ONE GUNBOAT IS SUNK

Peking Conceals Defeat, Sends More Troops—Bank Runs Continue —Business Stopped.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—A dispatch to The Daily Mail dated Peking, says:

"The telegraph wires are cut to the south of Kwang-Shui, a town on the Hankow and Peking Railway, some seventy miles north of Hankow, and about 630 miles south of Peking. The imperial forces were defeated at Hankow in the fighting of Wednesday and Thursday.

"There is a rebel movement on foot to outflank the 20,000 imperialist troops. The republicans are endeavoring to capture Kwang-Shui, and success would mean the occupation of the Peng Ching-Kwan and Tung Hwang-Tien passes, thus blocking the progress southward of the imperialist troops on the Hankow and Peking Railway.

"Twenty-five thousand more troops have been ordered to the front by the Government. The run on the native banks continues and trade is at a standstill."

Another dispatch, dated Kiu-Kiang, Thursday, says the fighting ended in a decisive victory for the revolutionists, who are in possession of the camp of the imperialists.

"I was present at the engagement," says the correspondent. "The casualties were slight, but immense fires were caused by the shells."

IMPERIAL TROOPS BEATEN.

Retreat Before Rebels—Chinese Gunboats Withdraw.

SHANGHAI, China, Oct. 20.—The following message from Vice Admiral Sir Alfred Winsloe, the senior British naval officer at Hankow, sent by wireless from a British vessel off Hankow, was received here this morning:

"All telegraph lines to Shanghai and to Peking were destroyed by fire last night for a distance of a mile beyond the settlement."

Another wireless message dispatch from Hankow at noon to-day and retransmitted over the land lines at Kiu-Kiang, reaching here at 4 o'clock, says that the Government troops retreated up Seven Mile Creek, where the Chinese warships withdrew down the river out of sight.

A message received to-night says that the defeated imperial troops are now entrenched on Seven Mile Creek. It is added that one Chinese gunboat was sunk in the river by its crew, who deserted to the rebels, whereupon Admiral Sah Chen-Ping took the other warships of the fleet down the river, as he could not trust their crews.

Still another message says that the revolutionists at Hankow claim a great victory over the imperials. They declare that they captured the riverside and the railway station, after which all the Chinese warships retreated with the exception of one cruiser, which seceded to the rebels.

The retreat of the imperialists at Hankow is confirmed in other dispatches from Kiu-Kiang, which state that the Chinese gunboats are retreating to Kiu-Kiang. The conduct of the rebels at Hankow is reported to be exemplary. Martial law is being enforced.

To-day's advices of rebel successes at Hankow caused great jubilation among the Chinese here. Previously they had been downcast.

Despite alarmist rumors trustworthy information received here is to the effect that all is quiet at Kiu-Kiang, Wuhu, Nanking, Soochow, and Hang-Chow. There has been a large exodus to Shanghai from these places, but reports of impending trouble there are almost all traceable to interested Chinese. The worst feature of the situation is the stringency in money, due to a demand for silver for even the best paper. Several native banks in Shanghai have suspended payments.

A loan of $3,000,000 in new currency of Nanking sent to the official banks here has partially relieved the situation, but business is at a standstill, and a crisis is threatened unless negotiations are begun by the bankers with the merchant guilds to avert it.

The run on the banks here has stopped, but the native banks are unable to pay their outstanding checks and business is at a standstill. Already $5,000,000 has been lost in trade. Otherwise the situation here is quiet.

The venerable North China Daily News, anticipating an ultimate imperial victory, in an editorial to-day recalling the awful fate which traditionally awaits rebels in China, the slaughter of innocent kinsfolk with the object of blotting out tainted names, says that the powers are not intervening because of self-interest, and the paper must lift up its voice in the cause of humanity. It adds:

"The ringleaders undoubtedly must die, but Yuan Shi Kai, arriving with well-filled money bags and imperial pardons ready for signature, is offering mercy to those who have been coerced into participating in the revolt.

"The events of the past weeks must lead to a genuine redress of grievances. China should remember the starving multitudes, beggared by the Yang-tse-Kiang floods."

There are a total of eighteen foreign warships at Hankow, and others are proceeding there. Many foreign vessels are also at other ports on the Yang-tse River. The American ships at Hankow are the gunboats Villalobos, Helena, and El Cano. The French cruiser Dupleix has been sent to Nanking.

The American torpedo boats Bainbridge, Barry, and Dale are here.

As viewed from here, the Chinese who are not openly identified with either the loyalist or the revolutionary cause appear like a flock of sheep, hesitating, and pretty certain to follow the majority when they are sure of the probable outcome. Everything depends upon the result of the first few battles. Local sympathy is generally with the rebels, who will be supplied openly with funds if they seem in a fair way to win. Up to now the revolutionary element here have conducted their campaign with great strategy. There are practically no Manchus in this section. Two English newspapers here now speak of "constitutionalists" instead of "revolutionaries."

There was a riot in a native newspaper office last night when a telegram announcing that the imperialists had won the first battle was posted.

It is stated that the plans of the rebels do not contemplate the destruction of bridges over the Yellow River. On the contrary, their object is to lure the imperial troops south and then bring about an uprising in North China, thus placing the imperialists between two fires.

The ultimate purpose is to make one of the cities on the Han River the capital of the empire. Such a location would be ideal and have many advantages over Peking, which is far removed from the centre of population.

The Manchus are strong at Nanking and Hang-Chow, but all other towns in the district are distinctly revolutionary in sentiment, particularly Soo-Chow, which is the seat of a great modern university.

Knew of Rebel Victory Near Hankow Twenty-four Hours Before Public.

PEKING, Oct. 20.—It is apparent here to-night that the Imperial Government knew the result of the battle at Hankow between its forces and the rebels for more than twenty-four hours before it became public here. Reports of the rebel victory gradually leaked out during the day, but the first positive account of the defeat of the imperial troops was delivered to the foreign legations to-night by The Associated Press.

The success of the revolution has been considered here to hinge upon the result of the first encounter, as its moral effect would probably be more far-reaching in China than anywhere else. When the fugitive imperialists reach the main army, which is mobilizing near Sin-Yang-Chow, the news of the repulse, it is believed, will utterly demoralize the troops, while, on the other hand, the news as it goes along the Yang-tse River will probably result in further important accessions to the rebel forces.

The foreign legations here believe that to-day's news from Hankow and Yu-Nan will mean that the provinces south of the Yang-tse and also some on the north side of the river sooner or later will secede.

The Government acknowledges that there is a serious situation in Chang-Sha, Province of Hu-Nan, which it is believed in Peking means that Chang-Sha has joined the revolt.

Foreigners whose business it is to study China think that the northern provinces, which are not deeply affected by sedition, may rally around the Manchus. Everything, however, seems to depend on an immediate and successful advance by Minister of War Gen. Yin Tchang, who now commands 20,000 men within 100 miles of Hankow, but only the Foreign Ministry pretends to enjoy confidence in his promised attack. Already Gen Yin Tchang is issuing proclamations in which he is offering pardon to all who desert the rebel standard, and it is believed he will rely on proclamations and negotiations, fearing or being unable to move his army.

At midnight to-night a report from Gen. Yin Tchang was published in the Official Gazette. It does not refer to Wednesday's fight at Hankow. It says the Twenty-second Regiment arrived at Hankow Sunday, and that the rebels attacked twice, but were repulsed, and that three rebels were captured. His spies report that the rebels are preparing for a defense of Wu-Chang and Hankow. Many desertions from the rebel ranks are reported. Gen. Yin Tchang says he has made Sin-Yang-Chow his temporary headquarters and will proceed southward after the arrival of the Fourth Division of the troops.

An edict which is published sanctions Gen. Yin Tchang's proposals, and says it is hoped he will lose no time in suppressing the rebels. Another edict expresses compassion for the people in those provinces which are suffering from drought and rebellion, and orders 200,000 taels from the late Empress Dowager's hoard to be paid to Yuan Shi-Kai, who will arrange for its distribution among the distressed people.

The first message to reach the capital with news of the situation at Hankow since telegraphic communication with the South was interrupted at 6 o'clock Wednesday night was sent from Hankow early yesterday morning, was carried by a messenger to the nearest open wire, filed for transmission late to-day, and received here this evening. It set forth merely that at the time the messenger left Hankow the Imperial forces were being defeated.

The Chinese officials had asserted that the absence of news was due to the fact that the Minister of War, Gen. Yin Tchang, was holding the telegraph lines and not allowing any but his own messages to be transmitted. They said that Gen. Yin Tchang had completed the organization of his forces, and was rapidly pushing forward his troops, meanwhile contenting himself with reporting military details without furnishing definite news of Wednesday's fight.

It was explained that the concentration of the two imperial divisions had been completed last night at Kwang-Shui, on the Peking & Hankow Railroad, seventy miles north of Hankow.

Official assurances were also given that, although the situation had been very grave recently, the outlook was now much improved, and the ultimate triumph of the Government was certain. The optimistic tone of the Government assurances was not shared by the populace generally, and the continued absence of news led to a plentiful crop of alarmist reports.

One of these was that the rebels had cut the railroad behind the imperial troops and captured Siaokan, thirty miles north of Hankow. This the pessimists contended accounted for the cessation of news reports.

Another native report was that the rebels held the railway tunnel at Sin-Yang-Chow in the southern part of Ho-Nan Province, and about 100 miles north of Hankow.

Attempts to establish wireless communication beween the capital and Hankow have thus far been fruitless.

Consular dispatches from Yun-Nan, the capital of Yun-Nan, the southwesternmost province of China and southwest of Sze-Chuan, report persistent rumors of disaffection among the imperial soldiers. Both the modern troops and the local regiments threaten to mutiny because they have not been paid, and refuse to march against the rebels in Sze-Chuen.

The Viceroy of Yun-Nan is said to have withdrawn the ammunition from the troops and to have fortified his yamen.

The French Consul at Yun-Nan received a letter signed "War Minister of the Revolutionists," recommending that foreigners leave the country while yet there was time. In consequence the missionaries have been warned by couriers and are preparing to leave. A Mohammedan rebellion is reported imminent in Kan-Su, the most northwestern province of China, the scene of the Mohammedan revolt in 1858-75.

The embargo on code messages from Tien-Tsin has been removed, but Shanghai is still deprived of this privilege.

The legations to-day sent a strong joint protest to the Government against the prohibition of cipher dispatches, which is completely dislocating trade and threatens to upset the money market and lead to a dangerous panic.

Rear Admiral Murdock, Commander in Chief of the United States Asiatic Fleet, whose flagship, the Saratoga, is at Manila, cabled the American Legation today that two United States torpedo boat destroyers had gone to Nanking, and that the cruiser Albany would reach Shanghai Oct. 25.

A few American women, mostly missionaries, and children have taken refuge here from points along the Peking & Hankow Railroad. The Board of Communications, replying to the request of the American Legation to-day, gave assurance that every effort would be made to provide safe transportation for all foreigners in the event of dangerous developments.

TAKE IMPERIALIST CAMP.

Rebels Found It Deserted—Baggage and Ammunition Abandoned.

HANKOW, Oct. 19, (delayed in transmission.)—A two days' battle between the Government forces from the North and the revolutionists ended in a victory for the latter.

When the fighting ceased Wednesday evening the revolutionists took up a strong position. Reinforcements for the rebels arrived during the night, and early this morning (Thursday) a force fully 5,000 strong commenced an advance on the imperial encampment. This was conducted cautiously. On the march the rebels burned hundreds of huts, fearing an ambush.

The loyalist infantry made a faint show of resistance, while the imperial gunboats threw a few shells ineffectively. The shots from the warships fell wide of the mark and failed to dislodge a rebel field gun, which had been made the special object of attack.

When the republican scouts reached the imperial camp they found it deserted, but suspicious of a ruse fired volleys in all directions. Then the main body entered, waving banners and shouting in jubilation.

The rebel army is now intrenched in the camp, which is three miles from Hankow. The loyalists have halted seven miles further north, where they are awaiting reinforcements.

In the course of Wednesday's battle the Red Cross, for the first time in history, put Chinese workers in the field. The Red Cross has not yet obtained recognition by the imperial troops, and consequently many of their wounded who were left on the field were killed and mutilated by civilians who are in sympathy with the revolt. The foreign nurses remained on the battlefield to take care of the wounded, in spite of the advice of the Consuls that they leave. The mission hospitals have now become Red Cross stations.

Many of the down-river towns report disturbances. A newspaper correspondent found at a railway station in the midst of a deserted camp three frightened Chinese, who asked him to escort them to Hankow. The presence of foreigners is considered protection wherever there are revolutionists.

SILVER TO NORTH CHINA.

Banks Shipping Large Quantities—Chinese Paper Discredited.

HONGKONG, China, Oct. 20.—The foreign banks continue large shipments of silver, including British dollars, to North China, owing to the fact that Chinese paper currency is being discredited. The market is practically depleted of specie.

The Board of Posts and Communications has instructed the Chinese telegraph administration to accept telegrams in plain language only and not to transmit cipher messages.

YUAN SHI KAI MOBILIZING.

Preparations Nearly Complete—Alarm in Peking Over Japanese Activity.

LONDON, Oct. 21.—Special dispatches received here from Shanghai report that there has been rioting at Hankow, Han-Yang, and Wu-Chang. Martial law was declared in all three cities, but the rebels were only able to maintain partial order. At Hankow several looters were shot. At Han-Yang both rioting and looting were indulged in.

According to the dispatches the last refugees arriving at Shanghai say that the rebels have thrown up formidable earthworks on the hills of Han-Yang.

A majority of the natives of Shanghai as well as many foreigners there sympathize with the rebels, and the dispatches say that when a placard announcing an imperial victory at Hankow was posted at a native newspaper office the Chinese broke the windows of the building.

A dispatch from Peking says that Yuan Shi Kai's preparations to put down the rebellion are almost complete. He has called many of his trusted officials to his aid, and has already mobilized all the Yang-Tse provinces, and is sending brigades to form cordons in Hu-Peh and Sze-Chuen Provinces to prevent a possible scattering of the rebels.

According to this dispatch continual messages received from Tokio speak of feverish Japanese military and naval activity. This fact causes great anxiety to the Peking Government.

REPORT IMPERIAL VICTORY.

Rebels Defeated at Nanking, Chinese Tell Berlin.

BERLIN, Oct. 20.—The Chinese Embassy here has received a cablegram from Peking announcing a Government victory at Nanking.

It says the insurgents were "considerably beaten," and the Government troops and naval vessel victorious.

MURDOCK OFF FOR CHINA.

American Admiral Sails from Manila for Shanghai.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—Rear Admiral Murdock, Commander in Chief of the Asiatic fleet, to-day cabled to the Navy Department that he was leaving Manila for Shanghai to be nearer the scene of the Chinese disturbances.

He announced he was leaving on the Rainbow, and that his flagship, the Saratoga, would follow him.

MISSIONARIES ARE SAFE

Dispatch to Head of United Evangelical Mission Says.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Oct. 20.—A cable dispatch received to-day by Bishop Rudolph Dubs, head of the Missionary Board of the United Evangelical Church, indicates that the missionaries of the Church in the war zone in China are unharmed.

Most of the United Evangelical missionaries in China are from Eastern Pennsylvania, and the Bishop wired some days ago to learn if they were safe. The reply to-day is as follows:

tried to escape by the stars, but the fumes of ammonia drove them back, and they ran to the windows, gasping for breath and yelling for help.

Their cries were heard by the firemen of Engine 29 and Truck 8 which, with Deputy Chief Binns and Battalion Chief Rush, had been the first to get on the scene. Ladders were raised to the windows and the negroes were carried to safety.

Other members of the fire companies, meantime, had been trying to enter the cellar. They were driven ba[illegible] again and again by the fumes of ammonia, to fall gasping, but once they had gulped a refreshing breath or two of air they returned to the attack and at last half a dozen men got into the engine room.

It was a mass of broken wood, splintered lathing, and twisted ironwork. It was there that the full force of the explosion had come, and it seemed as if nothing could have lived through it. But as the firemen looked about they heard groans, and an instant later the whole crew was tearing at a pile of wreckage which covered the floor. Presently they unearthed a man covered with dirt from head to foot. They rushed him out into the air, expecting to find him half dead. He proved to have only a few bruises, and in a few moments recovered.

It was Mulligan, the Chief Engineer. He could tell no more than had Solomon about what happened in the building.

Street Strewn with Wreckage.

What had happened in the street was apparent in the fierce glare of the burning gas which flamed up like an ignited oil spouter. Bits of the boiler tubes had been sent flying as far north as Laight Street, a block and a half above the scene of the explosion. Whatever they had struck they had carried away with them and the sidewalk on the west side of Greenwich Street, between Hubert and Laight Streets was a mass of twisted iron where the flying missiles had ripped away the iron gratings, covering cellar entrances.

The tenement at the northwest corner of Hubert and Greenwich Street looked as if it had withstood a siege of Maxim guns. Its front bore many indentations where the boiler tubes had struck it, and many of the windows were broken. Several tenants in the place had been injured by the shock or by flying glass or debris hurled at them by the boiler tubes.

In the saloon Thomas Linsky, the proprietor, had been at the cash drawer when a piece of tubing flew through the door, sending a brick ahead of it which struck Linsky in the back and knocked him down. He cut his head as it struck against the counter. Murphy, Waller, and Robinson were in the saloon, and they were flung down and bruised by flying pieces of débris. The windows in the place were smashed and the door was driven in. The place was almost a wreck.

Upstairs the families occupying the house had been tossed from their beds, and presently ran panic-stricken into the street. The tenants of the two five-story tenements at 398 and 400 Greenwich Street, which adjoin the wrecked cold storage plant on the south, were also thrown from their beds. They piled into the street.

Doctors from the Hudson Street Hospital had opened a field hospital here, and the reserves from the Leonard Street and Macdougal Street Station were called to keep the crowds back. Meantime traffic had been stopped on the street and on the Ninth Avenue elevated.

A piece of stone sidewalk had been sent crashing through a girder which supports the rails on the elevated, and the street was filled with stone and wood in heaps of wreckage. Representatives of the railroad examined the foundations of the elevated pillars, and finally won the consent of Deputy Chief Binns for the line to resume running. Piles of débris first had to be removed from the tracks, and it was more than an hour after the trains had been held up before they started running again.

How much damage was done to the storage plant could not be learned last night. The entire lower part of the building was wrecked and the cellar was flooded by escaping water from the high pressure main. This was shut off after a time, but at an early hour this morning the gas was still burning in the broken main, shedding a leaping, lurid light over the wreckage, around which firemen still stood guard.

PREFERS CELL TO HOME.

Carpenter, Possibly Fearing the Broomstick, Elects to Go to Prison.

Robert De Vires, a carpenter, startled Judge Warren W. Foster in General Sessions yesterday by announcing that he would rather go to jail than to return to his wife and two children whom he is charged with abandoning.

De Vires was arraigned in court yesterday for pleading and at once pleaded guilty to the facts charged against him. He admitted in a sorrowful voice that he had abandoned his wife and children, two boys ten and twelve years old respectively, and Judge Foster said kindly:

"Would you rather go home and support your wife or have me send you to jail?"

"I'd rather go to jail," promptly responded the defendant, while the courtroom gloom was dispelled in a burst of laughter.

When the court attendants had finally restored order Judge Foster turned to the abandoned wife and said:

"You see it is quite useless, Madam; your husband is determined."

De Vires was remanded to the Tombs for sentence, and investigation showed that Mrs. De Vires took a notion occasionally to chase her husband about the house with a broom.

NO WORK FOR THE COURT.

Judge Malone Complains of the District Attorney's Methods.

Judge Malone of General Sessions was compelled yesterday for the second time this week to adjourn court because the District Attorney had no homicide cases ready for trial. Judge Malone remarked that there were seventeen prisoners in the Tombs awaiting trial on homicide charges, both in General Sessions and in the criminal branch of the Supreme Court, and said he could not understand why the District Attorney had no case ready.

Assistant District Attorney Manley said that one homicide case had been disposed of this week, and that another prisoner who had been expected to stand trial had pleaded guilty to a lesser degree of crime.

ONE KILLED IN TRAIN CRASH.

Sixteen Hurt—Locomotive Struck by Freight, Hits Passenger Engine.

MARSHALL, Texas, Oct. 20.—After reversing his engine when almost upon a freight locomotive, a Texas & Pacific Railroad passenger engineer jumped to save his life to-day. The two locomotives crashed together with such force that the passenger locomotive started backward.

It continued unchecked in the local yards, crashing into eastbound passenger train No. 4, killing Clint Hall, a switchman, of Whelan, Ark., and injuring sixteen persons, mostly passengers.

CARNEGIE SHARES INTERVIEW ON SHIP

With Congressman Littleton, He Entertains Reporters in Talk on Many Subjects.

TO TESTIFY ON STEEL

Before Littleton's Committee—"He's All Right," Says Congressman—Significance of Ore Deal.

Congressman Martin W. Littleton and Andrew Carnegie were passengers on the White Star Liner Celtic, in from Liverpool last night. Congressman Littleton is a member of the Steel Investigation Committee. Andrew Carnegie comes here to tell the committee some of the things he knows about steel.

When Mr. Carnegie heard on the other side that Mr. Littleton was to be a fellow voyager, he said he would probably take advantage of the journey to find out what he was wanted for. It was apparent last night that Mr. Littleton had betrayed no state secrets during the days at sea.

When the vessel left Quarantine the Congressman appeared in the lobby near the information bureau. He was asked what significance he saw in the announcement that the United States Steel Corporation would abrogate its lease of the Great Northern Railroad Company's ore lands. He said he interpreted it to mean that the Steel Corporation did not want to be in a position before the investigators of holding a monopoly of the steel ore supply of the world.

"I talked to Mr. Carnegie," he said, "and he is of the same opinion."

Just then Mr. Carnegie joined Mr. Littleton. He was asked why he took an oath of allegiance to the King when accepting the freedom of the city of St. Albans.

"I simply conformed to an ancient custom," he replied. "They brought out an old book of the seventh century and I followed the custom and took the oath.

"We fellow kings," Mr. Carnegie said with a smile, "are friendly with each other. You know I am an American sovereign. I know King George and I knew his father. If he obeys me as well as I obey him it will certainly be a square deal."

"By going back into the seventh century," put in Mr. Littleton, "you are safely without the Statutes of Limitation."

Mr. Carnegie turned to the reporters. "Boys," he said, "I missed you very much."

"It is safe to say that you will now make up for lost time," broke in the Congressman.

"I always had an ambition to be a reporter," said the Master of Skibo. "No class has a better chance in life or a greater opportunity to rise."

"Unless they are overworked," said Mr. Littleton. 'I have not only seen reporters overworked, but I have seen them cruelly overwork a subject. Reporters ought to organize. If you had been a reporter you would have organized them."

Mr. Carnegie smiled and admitted that he would. From that subject he shifted to that of public libraries.

"It is simply marvelous," he continued, "the slight cost of bringing the masters of literature to the masses. On the other side it is something below 6d a year for each person in a community. I have given between 2,200 and 2,300 public libraries. I have never dictated what shall go in a library or what shall be excluded. All I have required is that the building be approved by my expert, and that is simply to have a standard."

"Do libraries injure authors?" Mr. Carnegie was asked.

"I do not think so. I imagine the libraries purchase more books than the author ever dreamed he would sell. Books can never be cheapened in the eyes of an author."

"Well, there is not much for the author by the time the public library gets a book," spoke up Mr. Littleton.

This Mr. Carnegie denied, and continued in a reminiscent vein: "Before I was 21 I was sent to see Col. Stokes, who lived seventeen miles outside Pittsburgh. That was the first time I was ever in a great house. Over the mantel in the library was carved: 'He who cannot reason is a fool; he who will not is a bigot; he who dares not is a slave.' That was the first library I had ever seen, and though I was poor I made up my mind that some day I would have a library of my own. That motto is in the library in my New York home and also at Skibo. It is always well to be a King in your dreams."

"You are eloquent," said Mr. Littleton with a smile.

"I have good reason, for I am full of my subject. Of course, Mr. Littleton, being an orator, will appreciate that.

"As to my future movements? There is a meeting in Washington to which I am summoned. I would have found out what I was wanted for if I had been able to get Mr. Littleton alone on this trip."

"Ah," said Mr. Littleton.

"This world is such a haven of rest, of course I want to stay here as long as possible," Mr. Carnegie went on. "If I go to the next world and get in with a reporter I know I will travel in the right direction."

"Well, well," said Mr. Littleton. In the pause Mr. Carnegie was asked whether he was going before the Investigating Committee.

"Yes, but I do not call it an investigation. I am going to give the committee some much needed information."

Col. Roosevelt urged the necessity of stopping labor in tenements and of supporting labor unions because "there can be no hope for the redress of wrongs upon an afflicted section of the community until some power is lodged in the hands of the persons afflicted with which to fight back." The matter of tenement labor brought Col. Roosevelt to the subject of the courts and certain Judges.

"I regret to say," he commenced in slow, emphatic tones, shaking his right arm toward the gallery, "that owing to hurtful and mischievous judicial decisions New York State stands far behind where it ought to stand.

"I said I was for labor unions, because I believe in them, when they are right. But I have no more fear of opposing labor unions when they go dead wrong than I have of opposing Judges when they go dead wrong. No many is a friend of the people who is afraid to speak out against any one section of the people when that section is going dead wrong. When I speak out against certain court decisions it does not mean that I am against the courts. I respect them entirely, and I want to say for our Judges that, as a class, they excel any other class in devotion and loyalty and in sound thinking.

"But experience has shown that people may be aroused, and legislative and executive officers may show the intention of carrying out the people's purposes, and yet the whole movement for good may come to naught, and festering wrong and injustice may be perpetuated because certain Judges, certain courts, are steeped in some outworn political philosophy and totally misapprehend their relations to the people and the public needs.

"I am entirely aware that, no matter how carefully I guard what I say, and no matter how cautiously and exactly I state the bald facts and truths that we should all recognize, yet that what I say will surely be misrepresented with a deliberate purpose of misleading honest citizens. But I feel that it is my highest duty to speak plainly on this subject so vital to our common welfare.

"I ask you mothers here to think of your own children when they were five years of age, and then think of a court decision declaring that for children who are five years of age to work in canning factories in this State is all right because they are engaged in "agricultural pursuits.

"Why, I know of women who work in the canning season for seventy hours a week. I know of authenticated cases where women and children have worked until 3 o'clock in the morning, when the hour to report back again for another day was 7 o'clock of the same morning.

"Do you wonder, then, that I wish to saa a law passed and put into the statute books which will end this infamy, or a flat reversal obtained of the judicial decision by which the last law passed was declared unconstitutional?

"The other day Jake Riis handed me a photograph of a father and seven children, all under 14 years of age; every child worked in a cotton mill of the South, and the poor dependent father had unfortunately lost his other supporter—his wife. He was sitting in the midst of his children with his feet above his head propped up on a table. What kind of an electorate can you expect in the next generation, if it is to come from children worked as these children were. We must save children from unnatural parents such as that man is, and we have got to have new, enlightened, judicial interpretations of laws passed to do it.

"Some men want us to carry flintlocks to fight our present battle. Why, when I was raising my regiment for the Spanish war, two good and eminently respectable officials of the Naval Department wanted me to arm my men with black powder muskets, because they had found that kind of a musket a good thing in the civil war. I did not do it. Yet I loved those old men. They meant well. Like many of our Judges, they simply don't fit the age in which we live.

"I am not talking about abstract things. I am talking about flesh and blood, the ills which flesh and blood are heir to, and to fight for them is the only thing worth being in politics for."

Col. Roosevelt praised the corporation officers who made settlements in the Cherry Hill mine explosion cases, declaring that they went far ahead of the weak law, and set a new standard of relationship between capital and labor.

He quoted many extracts from speeches by Abraham Lincoln and Justices of the Supreme Court and various State courts, challenging his critics as he did so "to put these statements beside any statements I have made or shall make about the courts, and find any essential difference betweeen what they say and what I say." He warned the judiciary in general that, unless there was change for the better and public confidence in the courts was somewhat restored, the power to pass on legislative enactments, which now rests with American Judges, may be stripped from them.

POLICEMEN ESCAPE ON PERJURY CHARGE

JUDGE'S SUGGESTION IGNORED

Aid of Assistant District Attorney Not Wanted—"System" Accused of Trying to Save Huntington.

Deputy Police Commissioner Dillon, trial Commissioner in the case of the eight policemen charged with perjuring themselves in an effort to provide an alibi for ex-Policeman Reuben Huntington, who was jointly indicted for grand larceny with John Horay for holding up and robbing an immigrant, refused yesterday to avail himself of the suggestion of Judge Swann that Assistant District Attorney Presser, who is familiar with the details of the affair, be permitted to conduct the cases against the policemen. Horay, in a confession to Judge Swann, had charged that ever since his arrest he and his family had been intimidated by representatives of the police "system," in an effort to keep him from "squealing" about Huntington's part in the hold-up.

"This department is very independent," said Deputy Commissioner Dillon, "and does not need or care for outside help in conducting its affairs. It is abundantly able to do so itself."

And, judging by the dispatch with which the cases against the accused policemen were disposed of, the department certainly was. The six of the eight who were present left the trial hall with broad grins, exactly half an hour after the case of the first one of them had been called. The charge against him was dismissed, and while decisions on the others was reserved on technicality, Deputy Commissioner Dillon admitted after the trial that he saw no difference in the circumstances of any of them, and that he considered the truth of the evidence given by the policemen at Horay's trial, on which the perjury charges are based, entirely possible and even probable.

John Horay, who is now awaiting sentence on the grand larceny charge, wrote secretly to Judge Swann in the Court of General Sessions from the Tombs some time ago, saying that he wanted to confess about the robbery of which he stood accused. He told how on May 14 he and two other men, in a card game at his home, had relieved John Kondratiuck, an immigrant, of $37. Then, he said, one of his two confederates called in Policeman Reuben Huntington, of the Union Market Station, charging that he had been robbed, and Huntington, he said, took from Kondratiuck, in a pretense of searching him, $180, for which he substituted a roll of paper wrapped in a dollar bill. The $180, he said, was divided between the policeman, Horay, and his two confederates. Kondratiuck, remembering the number on the policeman's helmet, later procured Huntington's arrest, and also that of Horay. Ever since that time, Horay said, the police "system" had been busy trying by threats and promises to him and his wife to keep him from testifying against Huntington. Huntington has since been dismissed from the police force, and his case is pending in General Sessions.

The robbery was committed sometime between 4 and 5 o'clock on May 14, and at the trial of Horay before Judge Swann, on Sept. 11, evidence was given by brother policemen of Huntington tending to show that he was asleep at the Union Market Station at the time of the robbery. Those brought up on charges of having given false evidence were Lieut. Robert E. Mills, Sergt. George H. Merritt, Policemen James C. Haggerty, Max Labell, Charles A. Sauer, Paul J. Byrne, and Detectives James J. Burke and Frank J. O'Brien. All except Sergt. Merritt were present yesterday.

The cases against each of them, except Burke, who was tried separately, were disposed of with the utmost dispatch. Lieut. Robert E. Mills, the first called, who couldn't foretell how easy it was going to be, said he'd like to have his case postponed so that the clerk of the Court of General Sessions and the stenographer who took the minutes of the Horay trial could testify in person, instead of submitting merely the stenographic minutes. His case was postponed to Oct. 27.

Policeman James C. Haggerty was then called, and pleaded not guilty. He waived the actual presence of the clerk and stenographer, and accepted the minutes. Commissionr Dillon read the short section of them, wherein Haggerty had testified that he saw Huntington at the station at 2:10 o'clock in the afternoon, and later at 6:30 o'clock. Horay was then called to testify that the robbery took place some time between 4 and 5 o'clock the same afternoon.

"That's the department's case," announced Deputy Commissioner Dillon, who didn't need an Assistant District Attorney to conduct it.

Ex-Sergt. William A. Murphy, the police counselor, put Haggerty on the stand to repeat his testimony, and then moved that the charge against him be dismissed, inasmuch as there was nothing to prove that he had not seen Huntington at the hours he mentioned, no matter what Huntington might have done in the time between them.

"The charge is dismissed," announced the Commissioner.

The same mode of procedure was followed in the case of Policeman Max Labell, only, inasmuch as Commissioner Dillon hadn't the original minutes in this case, and could only read a copied section from them into the record, he said he would reserve decision in this and the following cases. Policeman Charles A. Sauer was subjected to the same quick method with the same result. So was Policeman Paul J. Byrne.

Seeing this, Lieut. Mills raised his hand, like a boy in school:

"If the Commissioner pleases," he said, "I'd like to accept those minutes and let my trial proceed now, too."

"Too late," said the Commissioner. "I've already set a date for it."

The case of Detective Frank J. O'Brien was disposed of with the same satisfactory dispatch.

The greater part of the day was taken up in hearing testimony in the case of Detective Sergeant Burke on additional charges against him—that he had failed to apprehend Horay, though accused of grand larceny; that he had accepted a sum of money from Horay, and in consideration thereof failed to make the arrest, and that he had allowed Horay, despite the charge against him, to walk to the East Twenty-second Street Station without being in the custody of an officer.

Horay, escorted from the Tombs by a Deputy Sheriff, but without counsel to guide him, repeated his earlier testimony to Judge Swann. After the robbery, he said, he was approached by Burke in the back room of a saloon of one Feinberg, and there given to understand by the detective that if he gave Burke $25 he would not be arrested. Burke also told him, he said, that for this he (Burke) would get the complainant, Kondratiuck, out of the city, but Horay was unwilling to do this, preferreing, at Burke's second suggestion, he said, to "get together his witnesses and beat the case." Horay said he got his witnesses to his home on the following Sunday, and Burke visited him there. On the way down stairs, he said, he slipped to Burke $25, which he had hurriedly collected from various friends. Horay said he did not think the others present saw the money pass.

Outside, Horay said, were Feinberg and the complainant, to whom Burke made a sign to move on ahead. Then Burke, Horay, Mrs. Horay, and the witnesses proceeded together, he said, to within half a block of the East Twenty-second Street Station, where Burke told them to wait while he entered the station with the complainant "to avoid suspicion." Horay and his witnesses waited, and then entered the station after him, where Kondratiuck identified Horay and caused his arrest.

Horay's testimony, save as to the passing of the bribe money, was corroborated by his wife, and the "witnesses," George Saltheis and his wife, Anna, and Anton Maximovitch. Despite these four, Israel Feinberg, the saloon keeper, introduced by Burke's lawyer as "an industrious and upright man," declared that he had accompanied Burke into Horay's home, and that Horay was not there. He denied, too, that Horay and Burke had conferred together in the back room of his saloon as Horay alleged. Burke, in his own defense, declared that he had never seen Horay before he met him in the East Twenty-second Street Station just before he was ordered by the Lieutenant to place him under arrest.

He added that he had been unable to find Horay when he called at his home to arrest him, and that he would have arrested him had he found him.

"When was the first time that you made any statement to any one connected with the Police Department that you had visited Horay's house?" asked Commissioner Dillon.

"At the investigation in Commissioner Dougherty's room," replied Burke.

"Not to your superior officer at the station nor at the trial in the police court," continued the Commissioner, "nor to me when as Fourth Deputy Police Commissioner I questioned you?"

"No, I did not," replied Burke. He added that he thought it was his duty to protect Feinberg as the source of his information as to Horay's whereabouts.

Commissioner Dillon dismissed the charge of bribe taking against Burke on the ground that it had not been corroborated by anything more than the testimony of Horay, a self-confessed criminal awaiting sentence. The other charges, he said, would stand. He reserved decision on them.

Concerning the ease with which the other policemen were or will probably be let off, Commissioner Dillon said:

"None of those officers testified to a state of facts that was impossible or even improbable. It is quite possible for Huntington to have left his station between 3:30 and 6:30 o'clock in the afternoon and gone through all the things charged against him. No officer testified that he saw Huntington between 3:30 and 6:30 o'clock. In the meantime this crime may have been committed and probably was committed."

SING SING HAS A STRIKE.

Convicts Refuse to Work—Say Their Shop Foreman Oppresses Them.

OSSINING, N. Y., Oct. 20.—There was trouble this morning in the knitting shop in Sing Sing Prison, the 156 convicts employed there going on a strike.

The men in the shop are employed at knitting socks and underwear, all the work being done by machinery. Some one cut the wires leading from the dynamo to the machinery, and that brought all work to a standstill. The keepers on duty in the shop called James Connaughton, the principal keeper. Connaughton had a talk with the convicts, and told them they would have to work or be locked up in their cells.

As a rule, the prisoners would far rather work, but in this case they preferred their cells. They allege that they are being oppressed by Edward Burby, the foreman, who, they said, required too much from them and abused them when they failed to come up to the mark he set. Connaughton had them marched back to their cells, where they were locked up for the rest of the day.

There is a spirit of unrest among the convicts of other shops also. In the shoeshop yesterday, it is said, two convicts were sent to their cells for some act of insubordination. There are about seventy-five men employed there, and all refused to continue at work unless the two men who had been sent to their cells were put back to work. The men were put back, it is understood, and the others thereupon returned to their duty.

CHICAGO BANK MERGER.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 20.—Controlling interests in the Monroe National Bank have accepted terms under which the business of the institution is to be taken over by the Central Trust Company of Illinois. Meetings of the Boards of Directors of the two banks will be held to-morrow afternoon to take the formal action required.

It is understood that the Monroe will be liquidated, and will receive about 3½ per cent. on its $1,800,000 deposits in payment for the business.

The addition of $1,800,000 to the deposits of the Central Trust Company will increase its total above $21,000,000, figuring on the official report of Sept. 1. Its stock has advanced from $190 to $202 a share on inside buying in the last few days.

The Monroe National was started under State charter in 1903 as the Manufacturers' Bank. Edwin Brown, the President, was the principal organizer.

ARRESTS FRENCH OFFICIALS.

Gen. Toutee Said to Have Discovered Contraband Frauds in Morocco.

PARIS, Oct. 20.—News was received here to-night from Oran, Algeria, that on the arrival at Oudja, Morocco, of Gen. Toutee, the French High Commissioner to-day, he ordered the arrest of the French Government Commissioner, M. Destailleur, Captain of Customs Officers Pandori and the French Vice Consul, M. Lorgeou, all of whom were lodged in the military jail.

It is reported that they are charged with being concerned in the sale of contraband arms and land speculation frauds, but the foreign office and the Ministry of War here say they are entirely ignorant of Gen. Toutee's action.

It was said at the ministries that he was acting without instructions and had been urgently requested by cable to forward an explanation.

Killed by Electric Shock at Home.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWBURG N. Y., Oct. 20.—Frederick Dyroff, 17 years old, of Highland Falls, was killed by electricity in his home last night. As he entered the kitchen his head struck a hanging electric light, and he threw his hand up to prevent the light from striking his head. In doing so the shade and bulb were torn from the wire, and the young man's hand came in contact with the current. He fell into his mother's arms and died immediately.

REGISTRATION STILL BELOW OTHER YEARS

Gain Yesterday Over the Two Previous Days, but the Totals Remain Low.

MANHATTAN'S LOSS BIG

A Gain in Queens, but Even There the Increase Does Not Come Up to the Increase in Population.

The third day's registration figures from all parts of the city show a marked improvement over the result of the preceding two days of registration this year. With all the returns in last night, however, the borough totals as well as the grand total show a falling off from the registration on the three first days in all recent years since 1907. The Borough of Queens is an exception, showing a slight increase. It is very apparent, however, that, owing to the large influx of new voters into Queens, the increase there should have been much larger to keep up with the increase in population.

In regard to three-day totals, Manhattan compares unfavorably with all the other boroughs. It is nearly 2,000 behind the total of the three first days' registration in 1907, which was the most recent "off year." Brooklyn also is behind the three-day totals of 1908, 1909, and 1910, but shows an increase of about 10,000 over the three first days' figures in 1907.

The awakening of interest among the voters yesterday, as far as this can be indicated by the registration, is shown by a comparison of the third-day registration for the last five years. Manhattan, with its registration of 82,000 yesterday, has improved on the result of the third-day registration in all of the last four years, including 1909, when there was a Mayoralty election. The same is true of Brooklyn.

The improvement is more marked in the heavily Democratic districts, but the increase is extended to several Republican strongholds also.

Registration in Brooklyn, where there is a lively fight over the District Attorneyship, picked up perceptibly yesterday over the two preceding days of last week. There was a better showing in both Democratic and Republican districts. The best showing was made in the Twenty-third District, which is in Brownsville, and which is a Democratic stronghold. A lively fight is being waged in this district over the election of Alderman. Five districts in Brooklyn—the Third, Thirteenth, Eighteenth, Twenty-second, and the Twenty-third, showed an improvement over the figures for the third day of 1910, but a falling off from the figures of 1909. In only four districts, the Ninth, Fifteenth, Twenty-second, and the Twenty-third, did yesterday's figures exceed those of the third day of either 1909 and 1910.

Queens County showed a marked improvement over the third-day figures of 1910, but they are fully 1,000 behind those for the third day of 1909, in which year, of course, there was a Mayoralty election. The heaviest registration yesterday was in the Third and Fourth Districts of Queens.

Richmond County showed an improvement over the third day's registration in 1910 by a little less than 100, but it is fully 500 behind the third day's total for 1909. The increase in both Queens and Richmond can be accounted for more from the fact of increase in population than on account of any awakened interest in the campaign.

This table shows the registration yesterday by Assembly Districts and the result of the three first days' registration this year as compared with the figures ing and close at 10 o'clock at night.

OPEN FUSION HEADQUARTERS

Second Floor of Heidelberg Building Taken—Campaign Opens Monday.

Fusion headquarters were opened yesterday in the Heidelberg Building, at Forty-second Street and Broadway, where the entire second floor will be utilized for the campaign work. All the candidates on the ticket will have special quarters arranged for them there, and it is planned as far as possible to bring all the campaign activities of the Fusion forces under one roof, and make it a well-equipped political headquarters.

The candidates on the Anti-Tammany Fusion ticket will be notified of their nominations at the Fusion headquarters at 6 o'clock on Monday evening. Ex-Attorney General Julius M. Mayer will preside on this occasion, and all the candidates will speak.

The Fusion campaign in the Bronx will open on Monday evening with a big mass meeting at Niblo's Garden, Third Avenue near 170th Street, at which William R. Hearst and a number of the Fusion candidates will speak.

ARREST BERRI FOR LIBEL.

Candidates for Supreme Court Accuse Owner of Standard-Union.

William Berri, proprietor of The Brooklyn Standard-Union and one of the best known Republicans in the borough, was arraigned in the Adams Street Police Court yesterday on a charge of criminal libel preferred by the three Democratic candidates for the Supreme Court bench in the Second District. Meier Steinbrink, counsel for Mr. Berri, entered a plea of not guilty on behalf of his client, and Chief Magistrate Otto Kempner set the hearing for next Monday. The defendant was paroled in the custody of his attorney.

The action was brought by Herbert T. Ketcham, at present Surrogate of Kings County; Assistant Corporation Counsel Patrick E. Callahan, and ex-Congressman William Willett, Jr., the Democratic judiciary nominees. It is based on an editorial published in The Standard-Union on Wednesday last and entitled "Tammany's Tainted Touch on a Judiciary Ticket." On Thursday afternoon Messrs. Ketcham, Callahan, and Willett went before Supreme Court Justice Blackmar with their attorney, William N. Dykman, and presented the matter to him. After conferring with his associates on the bench, Justice Blackmar suggested that the case take the usual course—through a Magistrate's court. The nominees then took the matter before Magistrate Kempner. A warrant was granted, but the complainants did not demand that it actually be served upon Mr. Berri. He was notified by telephone of the action taken and appeared in court yesterday with his counsel.

The complainants declared that the editorial complained of was intended to "scandalize and disgrace" them, and to expose them to "contempt, ridicule, hatred and obloquy." The part of the article which they annexed to the complaint was as follows:

> The Democratic bosses wanted a district so overwhelmingly Democratic candidates could be named for a price to the Supreme Court bench, just as they are and have been for many years named by Tammany in the First Judicial District. * * * Just how the Supreme Court nominations were disposed of in Manhattan and what was expected of the Tammany nominees we learn from the very highest authority. Ex-Supreme Court Judge Roger A. Pryor, formerly a well-known Brooklyn man, testified that after he moved to New York County he paid to Tammany $10,000 as a "campaign" subscription for his nomination to a Supreme Court Judgeship. Other nominees of the big corporate interests which backed them, paid very much higher prices for their nominations. Boss Croker on the stand testified he turned down Judge Daly for renomination because the Judge refused to let the boss name the referees appointed in his court. * * * The first nominations to the Supreme Court bench in this district were made under the Tammany method this year. The tainted hand of Tammany rests on them. The Democratic people had nothing to do with these nominations. The candidates are boss nominees pure and simple, and as to one of them there is already a rumor of a shocking scandal involving the payment of a large sum of money.

In court Lawyer Dykman wanted to know whether the defendant admitted responsibility.

"We have pleaded not guilty, and that is all," said Mr. Steinbrink.

"Then you deny everything," pursued Mr. Dykman.

"Our plea is not guilty," repeated Mr. Steinbrink. "Do you want us to change the plea? What our defense will be you will learn on the day of examination."

F. X. Carmody Argued Jensen Case.

It was Francis X. Carmody of 64 Wall Street who argued before Justice Aspinall in Brooklyn on Thursday a motion to establish the status of Mrs. Adele Badours Jensen, who was divorced in Norway from Thomas Badours, and has since married A. B. Jensen, and not Attorney General Carmody, as was stated in THE TIMES of yesterday.

HEARST MEN BECOME DEMOCRATS WITH HIM

ALL FOR WAR ON MURPHY

Clarence J. Shearn and Melvin G. Palliser Among the Old League Chiefs Who Return to Democracy.

Not only William R. Hearst, but the bulk of his following who were formerly enrolled under the Independence League emblem, have enrolled as Democrats this year. As a result Mr. Hearst and his lieutenants, when they begin their fight on Tammany Leader Charles F. Murphy within organization lines, expect to start out with a net fighting strength of at least from 25,000 to 30,000 votes, which Tammany must reckon with in the primary fight next Spring when delegates to the State Conventions which are to select the delegations to the National Conventions will be elected.

It was learned yesterday that Clarence J. Shearn, Mr. Hearst's personal attorney and chief political lieutenant, had enrolled as a Democrat on the first registration day this Fall, although he at that time was a candidate for the Supreme Court on the anti-Tammany ticket. Melvin G. Palliser, another of the leaders in the Hearst movement, said last night that he had enrolled as a Democrat. On the other hand, John J. Hopper, Chairman of the Independence League County Committee, and candidate for Sheriff on the fusion ticket, declared that he had enrolled under the league emblem.

"I do not think that the Democratic organization in New York County controlled by Tammany Hall has improved to the degree where I could make common cause with it," said Mr. Hopper.

Mr. Palliser said at the Hotel Manhattan, where he was attending a meeting of the Committee of One Hundred last night, that it had been pretty thoroughly understood from the beginning of this campaign that the Independence Leaguers should enroll as Democrats in order to give their leader, Mr. Hearst, a fighting nucleus within Democratic organization lines.

In addition to the strength accruing from the enrollment of the old Independence League membership as Democrats, the friends of Mr. Hearst derive a lot of comfort from the fact that the Democratic League, composed of independent Democrats, started the anti-Murphy ball rolling this Fall by taking the initiative in the present Fusion movement. The Democratic League has an organization in practically every Assembly District in this city, with its members enrolled under the Tammany emblem. The attitude of outspoken opposition to the leadership of Mr. Murphy within the league has given the friends of Mr. Hearst reason to believe that they will have allied with them this element of independent Democrats in any fight they may undertake against Mr. Murphy in the Spring primaries next year.

"Every good Democrat will hail with satisfaction the announcement that Mr. Hearst is back in the Democratic Party," said Mr. Shearn yesterday. "I think every good Democrat will rejoice also that he is willing to lead a fight against the present leadership of Tammany Hall."

No statement was authorized from Tammany Hall with reference to the Hearst announcement that he had enrolled as a Democrat again after many years. To Tammany the return of Mr. Hearst, after five years of fights on the Tammany organization, means trouble and nothing else. All the Tammany leaders realize that there is not room for both Murphy and Hearst under the same organization roof, and none of the leaders is apt to underestimate the influence of the former chief of the Independence League.

"Will we welcome Hearst?" said a friend of Mr. Murphy. "Why, he will be as welcome in Tammany Hall as he would be in the public street."

WAR ON TAMMANY MEN.

Citizens' Committee Will Put Up a Contest in Each Assembly District.

The Citizens' Committee of One Hundred, a non-partizan organization formed to oppose renominated Assemblymen who voted for the Murphy-Gaynor charter and to support the Assembly candidates who pledge themselves to oppose Tammany's legislative programme, met at the Hotel Manhattan last night, and organized. Francis C. Huntington of the Citizens' Union and also of the Democratic League, was elected Chairman, Isaac N. Seligman, Treasurer, and J. O. Hammitt, Secretary. Mr. Seligman is Treasurer and J. O. Hammitt, Secretary of the Citizens' Union.

The long list of Vice Chairmen included these names: Everett V. Abbot, Otto T. Bannard, Richard S. Childs, Julius Henry Cohen, John Frankenheimer, A. S. Frisell, E. R. L. Gould, J. Warren Greene, Abraham L. Gutman, F. W. Hinrichs, Robert L. Hogouet, Raymond V. Ingersoll, Jacob C. Klinck, Alfred E. Marling, Dr. Henry Moskowitz, Melvin G. Palliser, Frank D. Pavey, E. S. Piper, Allan Robinson, William Jay Schieffelin, William S. Van Clief, and H. W. Williams.

After organizing the committee adopted resolutions under which its fight will be focused entirely on the proposed Tammanyization of the next Assembly. Fights will be made on the Tammany candidates in every district where there is a fighting chance. In Manhattan and the Bronx it is intended to open fire on the Tammany candidates in sixteen Assembly districts, and there will be contests waged in an equal number of Assembly districts in Brooklyn.

A Central Committee with William Jay Schieffelin, head of the Citizens' Union, as its Chairman, was appointed before the meeting closed. The campaign in the various boroughs will be conducted through sub-committees. Frank D. Pavey was named as Chairman of the committee for Manhattan, J. Warren Greene was appointed Chairman of the Brooklyn committee, and H. W. Williams of the sub-committee for Queens.

"The time is short," said Chairman Huntington after the meeting. "But a fire once lighted spreads rapidly. The resentment already kindled against the Murphy-Gaynor charter and the Levy election law is already a conflagration. This committee has only to bring the facts home to voters of New York City, and they will send such a delegation to Tammany Albany as will be a fitting rebuke to boss rule."

Republicans Active at Columbia.

On Amsterdam Avenue, opposite Hartley Hall, the Columbia University Republican Club opened headquarters yesterday, proclaiming its presence with a large election transparency. The names of Andrew F. Murray and William D. Brush, candidates for the Assembly and Board of Aldermen, respectively, from the Nineteenth District, appear on the broadside. Although this is an off year, interest in the coming election is running high on the campus. Harold Content, '11 Law and '08 college, is again a candidate for the Assembly on the Democratic ticket, and the Republican Club will have to work hard to retain the normal Republican majority in the district.

LAST CHANCE FOR VOTER

This is the last day of registration for the November election. If you are not registered you cannot vote or participate in your party primaries next year. Registration booths open from 7 A. M. to 10 P. M.

BRITT HEARING GOES OVER.

Secretaries and Others Summoned in Board of Elections Case.

The hearing in the case of J. Gabriel Britt, President of the Board of Elections, who is accused by the Republicans of refusing to allow them to see a public document in the shape of the certificate of nominations which Tammany filed a week ago, was adjourned yesterday until next Monday at the request of Assistant District Attorney DeFord, who has charge of the Bureau for the Prosecution of Offenders of the Election Laws, recently established by District Attorney Whitman.

The hearing was to have been held before Magistrate Appleton, sitting in Judges' Chambers in the Criminal Courts Building, but Mr. De Ford said he wasn't ready to proceed. Subpoenas have been issued for Henry W. Taylor and John A. Daly of the Board of Elections; Abraham S. Gilbert, counsel for the Republican County Committee; L. J. O'Reilly, Secretary to William R. Hearst; Thomas F. Smith, Secretary of Tammany Hall; Policeman John F. Bowser, L. S. Obermeister, 31 Nassau Street; A. S. Meyers, 182 Nassau Street, and Charles Firestone, 1,115 Broadway.

Tammany officials, it is alleged, in order to keep the Republicans from learning the relative positions on the ballot of their judicial candidates, thus preventing them from balancing the names with their own candidates, filed their certificates of nomination twenty-five minutes after midnight on last Friday, and it is further charged that President Britt when asked to produce the certificates for public inspection refused to do so.

ATTACK ON LEVY LAW.

A new action was brought yesterday before Justice McCall, in the Supreme Court, with a view of having declared invalid what remains of the Levy election law. A recent decision of the Court of Appeals declared unconstitutional the provision requiring personal registration of voters in rural districts where no such registration was required under the old law, and another provision making it illegal for the name of one candidate—no matter by how many organizations nominated or indorsed—to appear in more than one place on the official ballot.

The new action was started on behalf of Frederick Rohde, a taxpayer in the Borough of Richmond, who through his attorneys, Gleason & Carlton, asked the court to issue an order on Controller Prendergast to show cause why he should not be permanently restrained from paying the salaries of the present Board of Elections in this city. Lafayette B. Gleason, senior member of the law firm, is Secretary of the Republican State Committee.

The order is asked for on the ground that the Levy Election law, calling for an expenditure on the part of the City of New York, should have gone to Mayor Gaynor for approval and was not sent to him. The petitioner urges that because this was not done before the bill was sent to Gov. Dix for his approval it has not been properly enacted and should be declared invalid. As a further ground the petitioner submits to the court that where the law calls for a bi-partisan Board of Elections in all other counties, the counties of Richmond and Queens are left without representation on the New York City Board of Elections, which is made up entirely of residents in the counties of New York and Kings.

The case is returnable on Thursday of next week, when it is believed that argument will be heard by Supreme Court Justice Bischoff.

PASTOR IS ARRESTED AS GIRL'S POISONER

Faces His Accuser.

In Capt. Dugan's private office the prisoner met Druggist Hahn. Accuser and accused shook hands, and then the druggist related the story of the purchase of the cyanide. Richeson listened to the evidence without comment. He was asked if he wished to make a statement, being advised that anything he might say would be used against him. He shook his head in answer.

The court proceedings were brief and formal. Ex-Judge Dunbar, who had been retained for the defense, was present, and the date of continuance, Oct. 31, was agreed upon by him and Capt. Dugan, and ratified by Judge Duff. Richeson was then handcuffed and driven to jail.

Now that the arrest has been made, the officers of the Young Women's Christian Association in Warrenton Street, where Miss Linnell lived and died, have felt at liberty to talk about the case.

"Did Miss Linnell say anything before she died?"

Miss Inez Hanscomb says Richeson asked this question, when he was informed by telephone that the young woman had died at the association rooms from the effects of a dose of cyanide of potassium.

"Miss Julia Patterson, Superintendent of the association, was up stairs," says Miss Hanscomb, "and I, being a friend of Miss Linnell and knowing that she and the Rev. Mr. Richeson were understood to be engaged, assumed the task, at Miss Patterson's request, of notifying the Rev. Mr. Richeson of the girl's death."

"'This is the Rev. Mr. Richeson,' the man remarked, as I answered the ring. I thought that there must be some mistake, as the voice sounded like that of a man much older than Mr. Richeson is said to be.

"'This is Miss Hanscomb at the Young Women's Christian Association, Boston,' I stated, 'and I called you to inform you that Miss Linnell has died here, and that we want you to come in immediately, so that you may arrive by the time the medical examiner arrives.'

Indifferent About Her Death.

"'Miss Linnell is dead, but why did you call me?' asked the man at the other end of the line.

"'Because you were the only friend of Miss Linnell near at hand,' I replied, 'and because we felt that you should know of the fact, that you might come at once. Miss Linnell spoke of but one man as her fiancé, and she mentioned your name at all times.'

"I felt at the time that the Rev. Mr. Richeson's remarks were unusual, to say the least, for one supposed to be the fiancé of the young woman.

"'I remember that I baptized Miss Linnell at Hyannis three years ago,' responded the Rev. Mr. Richeson. 'I know her folks at Hyannis, where I used to preach, but I do not know why I should be called in regard to the matter. You know the names of her parents, do you not?'

"I responded that we did, but that we felt that inasmuch as he was her fiancé, and that she was out to luncheon with him during the day, it was right that we should notify him at once, particularly as he was the most easily accessible of all her relatives and friends.

"'Out to luncheon with me to-day?' said the Rev. Mr. Richeson. 'What do you mean by that? I was not at luncheon with Miss Linnell to-day.'

"'Well,' I responded, 'the medical examiner will soon be here, and there is but little time for you to get here if you are coming.'

"I could hear the man's voice across the line, but I could not understand what he said in regard to this. I told him that he would have to talk louder, for I could not hear what he was saying.

"'Did she say anything before she died?' came the voice across the line.

"The question took me entirely by surprise, coming from the mouth of a clergyman, and the fiancé of a girl who had just passed away. I hardly knew what I said, but I retorted:

"'No, she did not say anything before she died, but she said something this afternoon.'

"There the conversation came to an end. Miss Lucille Ziegler had been standing at my elbow all through it, and she, as well as I, was at a loss to account for the clergyman's attitude."

Wedding Is Postponed.

The wedding of Miss Violet Edmands to the Rev. Mr. Richeson has been postponed indefinitely. The Brookline heiress is so ill at her home in Devon Street that a physician has been called to attend her.

The accused pastor's friends in Cambridge refuse to believe he is guilty of the crime charged to him. They say they cannot believe that a man who could preach as he preached last Sunday can be rightfully accused.

After the regular prayer meeting tonight at the Immanuel Baptist Church in Cambridge twenty-five members of the church remained in the vestry and had an informal executive session, at which the arrest of the clergyman on the murder charge was discussed. No statement of their actions was given out, but Thomas H. Rumsey, Chairman of the Finance Committee of the church, said after the meeting that he will advise Mr. Richeson to tender his resignation as pastor.

"It is hardly to be expected that a church would be satisfied to have the occupant of its pastorate in jail. This is true regardless of whether Mr. Richeson is guilty or innocent," said Mr. Rumsey.

That Pastor Richeson threatened several times to kill the dog owned in the house where he lived in Cambridge because he said it was a nuisance and caused him much trouble by its actions in his room was a statement elicited tonight from Frank H. Carter, owner and occupant of the house and a loyal friend of the minister. Mr. Carter said that the dog's actions were the subject of much objection by the clergyman.

"Two weeks ago Mr. Richeson came to me and complained of the dog, saying he would have to vacate his room or kill the dog. He said he would rather do the latter," Mr. Carter said.

Richeson is 35 years old and is a native of Rosehill, Va. He was graduated from William Jewell College, Liberty, Mo., in 1906. Later he took the ministerial course and was graduated from the Newton Theological Institution, a Baptist seminary at Newton, Mass. He was ordained to the ministry in the Third Baptist Church of St. Louis. His pastorate at Hyannis was his first regular charge.

According to those who know him he is of a nervous temperament, and has been troubled with ill-health throughout his ministerial career. While a student at William Jewell College, Liberty, Mo., one of the women teachers there lent him $700. This woman is now suffering from tuberculosis in Utah. All of the principal has been returned by him.

RICHESON SUBJECT TO 'ATTACKS'

Mother of Linnell Girl Thinks He Must Have Been Out of His Mind.

HYANNIS, Mass., Oct. 20.—"I believe no mistake has been made," Mrs. Edgar Linnell, mother of the little music student and Sunday school teacher, Miss Avis Linnell, said to-day when she heard that the Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson had been arrested for the murder of her daughter. In seeming extenuation of the alleged act of the former Hyannis pastor, however, Mrs. Linnell later voiced the belief that Mr. Richeson was not accountable.

"He must have been out of his mind," Mrs. Linnell said when she recovered from the temporary breakdown that followed her receipt of the news of the arrest. Then, between sobs and occasional interruptions by her daughter, Mrs. Vida McLean of Brockton, Mrs. Linnell told of certain peculiarities of Mr. Richeson which she noticed while he was a caller at her home during the time he held the pastorate of the Baptist church here.

"Mr. Richeson, whom I loved as a son even before he became formally engaged to Avis, worried us often by attacks which he had at our house," she said. "Although they did not appear to be serious, they left him in a highly nervous state, and he was often forced to leave the table because of them. He worried about this trouble, and once broke his engagement with Avis, giving his physical condition as the reason. Their engagement was renewed, however, and Avis, I firmly believe, was engaged to him when she died. Poor girl!"

Between Mrs. Linnell and Mrs. McLean the story of the acquaintance of Miss Avis Linnell and the young pastor was told. Miss Linnell, possessed of a fine voice, was a singer in the Baptist church choir when Mr. Richeson assumed the pastorate there, four years ago. She was only 15 years old then. The new minister showed marked attention to the child, and within a few months was calling at the Linnell home.

"At first I objected," said Mrs. Linnell, "but only because I thought Avis was too young. I liked Mr. Richeson and thought him an admirable man, and finally consented when Avis told me that he loved her and that they were engaged. The wedding was set for last October, but Mr. Richeson's attacks troubled him and he broke the engagement, saying he would renew it if he found his physical condition warranted. He became engaged to Avis again, but they had never set a date after the first, I believe."

The talk led around to the visit to Boston last week of Mrs. Linnell, when she saw her daughter for some hours, and also met Mr. Richeson.

"My little girl seemed in the best of spirits and appeared happy in her relation with Mr. Richeson," Mrs. Linnell said, and added that the minister told her at that time that reports that he was engaged to Miss Violet Edmands of Brookline were untrue.

"So gay and light-hearted did Avis appear that day that one would think the child had not a care in the world," said her mother. "Her music lessons were delightful to her and everything was pleasant. Not a word or sign did she give me to indicate her condition."

RICHESON A FARMER'S SON.

Born Near Lynchburg, Va.—Worked on Street Cars in St. Louis.

Special to The New York Times.

LYNCHBURG, Va., Oct. 20.—The Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson is a member of a large family of Amherst County, this State. He was born about twenty miles from this city. His father is a substantial, though not wealthy, farmer, who has always toiled for the support of his family. The mother of the minister died twelve years ago, and soon thereafter the father married again.

This wife died, leaving several small children, and two years ago the widower wedded again, much against the wishes of his children. He is one of the most prominent residents of the county, having served a number of terms on the County Board of Supervisors.

Fifteen years ago Clarence Richeson came here and worked as a clerk for some time. Leaving here he went to St. Louis, Mo., where he obtained work as a motorman or conductor on a street car. When yet but a youth he expressed a desire to be a minister, and, apparently, always worked with that end in view.

It is learned to-day that announcements were received here twelve months ago of his engagement to Miss Violet Edmands, and within the last week invitations to the wedding to occur on Oct. 30 were received by numerous friends and relatives in this city.

EXPELLED FROM COLLEGE.

Richeson Was Caught Cheating in His Examinations—Once Seized with a Fit

LIBERTY, Mo., Oct. 20.—The Rev. C. V. T. Richeson was for several years a student at William Jewell College here, and was expelled in 1906 in his senior year when he was detected cheating in his examinations. At that time he was a ministerial student, and so far as known had no other discredits against him. At the college he registered from St. Louis, but his parents' address was given as Virginia. While in college he held several country pastorates, but after his dismissal from the institution dropped out of sight.

While in college he figured in one sensational incident when he refused to leave the home of a young woman, who is said to have jilted him, until 2 o'clock in the morning. At that time he apparently had a fit, and it was only through the efforts of fellow-students who were called by the family that he was induced to leave. The matter was quietly hushed up to prevent notoriety.

SALT LAKE, Utah, Oct. 20.—Miss Patsey Felts of Independence, Mo., who has been questioned by telegraph by the Boston police as to the past life of the Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson, is seriously ill at the home of her sister here. Eight year ago Miss Felts became interested in Richeson, who was then attending William Jewell College at Liberty, Mo. It is said she loaned Richeson sufficient money to complete his education. Since his ordination as a minister Richeson has paid back the loan, according to Miss Felts's relatives.

RICHESON LED A CAR STRIKE.

Well Remembered by His Former Comrades on St. Louis Street Cars.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Oct. 20.—The Rev. C. V. T. Richeson, who is held in Boston on a charge of murdering Miss Avis Linnell, is well remembered in St. Louis as a leader in the street care strike of 1900.

"Richeson worked under me on the old Lindell line," said Charles Bring, foreman of the street car company.

"He was handsome and had a smooth sort of address about him that engendered respect among the car men. He was an exhorter on strike questions. He worked on the Page Division as a conductor for several months preceeding the strike. His record up to his participation in the strike was good."

"I remember Richeson well," said Walter P. Donnell, foreman of the Page Avenue barns. "I was timekeeeper at these barns at that time, and came in frequent contact with Richeson, who was then a conductor. He had a winning way about him. The fact that he was studying for the ministry caused the men to have confidence in him, and they readily followed his advice in the strike. He urged them to strike. He would mount a barrel out in front of the barns and declare that they would not allow a car to run out of the shed unless the strikers' demands were acceded to. After the strike he made no effort to return to work."

"Richeson is from a good old Virgina family," said he. "He had relatives here in St. Louis at one time. I remember that he was an active strike agitator and was a sort of leader and speaker among the striking car men."

ITALIANS BOMBARD AND TAKE BENGAZI

When Turks Refuse to Surrender Admiral Aubry Attacks and Lands 4,000 Men from Ships.

ARABS AIDED THE DEFENSE

One Account Says They Fought While Turks Fled—Many Casualties and Many Prisoners.

BENGAZI, Tripoli, Oct. 20.—The Italian fleet, under Rear Admiral Aubry, bombarded this city yesterday and landed 4,000 men, who after a brisk battle occupied a portion of the town. The greater part of the troops, however, camped on the beach last night.

The Turks refused to surrender and made a stubborn resistance.

The expeditionary force instructed to occupy Bengazi arrived in the roadstead Wednesday morning, convoyed by the Italian battleships Vittorio Emmanuele III., Roma, Napoli, and Regina Elena; the cruisers Amalfi and Etruria, five smaller warships, and two torpedo-boat divisions.

Rear Admiral Aubry sent an officer with a white flag to the Turkish commander, demanding the surrender of the town. The Turk promptly refused, and subsequently was notified by the Italian commander that unless he changed his mind and capitulated before 6 o'clock the following morning the town would be bombarded at that hour.

No reply having been received to the Italian threat, the bombardment began at the hour set. The shelling by the fleet continued until 9 o'clock, when a detachment of sailors and troops was debarked. Other landing parties followed.

The first Italians to come ashore were received with a sharp rifle fire from the Turks. The Italians bore themselves well, and, establishing a position near the water's edge, stood the Turkish fire. They were rapidly reinforced from the fleet, and later in a forward movement the Italians took the barracks in the village of Sidi Houssein by assault. They also took and held a part of Bengazi.

Altogether, 4,000 men were landed. Late in the day temporary quarters were established on the beach. The Arabs assisted the Turks in defending the place.

Bengazi is a town of about 15,000 people situated on the Gulf of Sidra, 420 miles east by south of Tripoli. Of the inhabitants about 1,200 are Europeans. It is a starting point of caravans for Wadai and Egypt. It is in a fertile plain and has some commerce. The town is fortified, but is poorly built.

TRIPOLI, Oct. 20.—In the fighting at Bengazi yesterday between the Italians and Turks and Arabs there were numerous casualties on both sides. When finally the Italians rushed the trenches the Arabs made a strong resistance while the Turks fled. The Italians took many Arabs prisoners.

NO PEACE BASIS YET.

Turks Insist on National Integrity—Still Talk of European Alliance.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 20.—The declaration of Said Pasha, the Grand Vizier, in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday that he would devote himself to guaranteeing effectively the national honor and the integrity of the Ottoman Empire is considered in diplomatic circles to mean that it is impossible to find a basis for an understanding between Turkey, in her present state of mind, and Italy, whose views are diametrically opposed. It is thought that Said Pasha will be forced to adopt a policy of resistance or resign.

Rumors continue prevalent that negotiations have been begun with the Porte with a view of effecting the entrance of Turkey into the European groupings. In some quarters it is said the negotiations were initiated by Germany, which wishes Turkey to join the Triple Alliance, while again Great Britain is said to be the power with which the Porte desires to deal.

Meanwhile the commercial life of the country is suffering severely. Many Italian factories have ceased work and several banks have suspended.

Turkey opposes Italy's suggestion that the island of Samos, off the west coast of Asia Minor, which is under Turkish sovereignty, should be declared neutral.

NOT WELCOMED BY ITALY.

She Is Averse to Archaeological Expeditions in Tripoli Just Now.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—Commenting upon the reported refusal of the commander of the cruiser Chester to convoy from Malta to Cyrene the exploring expedition sent out by the American Archaeological Society, naval officials to-day stated that the warship was practically under the orders of the State Department.

Headquarters of the society in this country have informed the State Department that further exploration of the Cyrene ruins was to be postponed until the hostilities between Turkey and Italy are over, as the Italians are now waging war in that section of Africa. It is also understood that Italy is averse to any such explorations in Cyrene until it has fully established its authority over the country and is prepared to guarantee the safety of foreigners.

The explorers will operate at their own risk, and the Chester has sailed from Malta for Trieste to meet the Scorpion.

REPORT ON BRITISH STRIKE.

Royal Commission Opposed to Compulsory Recognition of Unions.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—The Royal Commission appointed at the time of the recent great railway strike issued a report to-day on the vital question of the recognition of the unions, for which the strike was declared. The Commissioners recommend a compromise.

They do not advise "compulsory recognition"—by which is meant the conduct of all negotiations on the men's part by trade union officials—but they urge that the men be permitted to choose whom they like to represent them as their Secretaries on the conciliation boards.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—In a report issued to-day by the railway commission of inquiry which was appointed in August last to endeavor to effect a settlement of questions at issue between the railway companies and their employes who were then on strike opposition is expressed to recognition by the companies of the men's unions. "The Commissioners think," the report says, "that with their great responsibilities the companies cannot and should not be expected to permit any interference by their men on the subjects of discipline and management."

The commission recommends the adoption of a new scheme, to be in force until Jan. 6, 1914, by which all questions affecting hours of work, wages, and conditions of service that cannot be settled by negotiation shall be referred to a conciliation board to be formed along the lines of the existing sectional boards of conciliation. It is proposed also that the existing agreements between the companies and the men shall remain in force until Jan. 7, 1912. The Commissioners recommend in conclusion that men on strike shall not be allowed to coerce by threats or intimidation other men who wish to work.

J. E. Williams, Chairman of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, in an interview to-night said he was certain the report would not meet with the approval of the railway men. In some respects, Mr. Williams said, the recommendations made for a slight improvement in the old scheme, but in other respects were much inferior.

DISMISS DANISH GENERAL.

Arendrup, Friend of Crown Prince, Criticised Danish Defence Plan.

COPENHAGEN, Oct. 20.—A disagreement between the Ministry of War and distinguished army officers has resulted in the resignation of two Generals and the dismissal of Gen. Arendrup, because in an interview he criticised the retention of the garrison at Fredericia and other features of the national defense plan.

The Minister of War stated that the retention of the garrison was due to the King's command. Gen. Arendrup was one of the army's best officers, and an intimate friend of the Crown Prince.

ARGO RAMS BATTLESHIP.

Steamer Runs Into German Ironclad Hessen—Bow Crushed.

KIEL, Germany, Oct. 20.—The German battleship Hessen was rammed last night by the Norwegian steamer Argo. The damage to the battleship was very slight.

The steamer's bow was crushed in, but she returned to Kiel unaided.

DOZEN MINERS DROWN IN 1,400-FOOT SHAFT

TRAPS SIXTY UNDER GROUND

Men Fight Desperately for Life, and Some Fall Back to Death—May Take Weeks to Recover Bodies.

Special to The New York Times.

HIBERNIA, N. J., Oct. 20.—A wall more than 200 feet thick which separated the old shaft from a new one that was being sunk in the mines of the Wharton Steel Company at this place was cracked this morning by a blast, and water from the old shaft quickly filled the new one, drowning twelve of sixty miners who were in it. It may be a week before enough water is pumped out to permit the recovery of the bodies.

The miners who were more than 1,400 feet under ground when the water poured in were all foreigners except David Slaight, the foreman, and as Slaight is dead it is hard to get a connected story. Besides Slaight the dead are Joseph Swenty, George Pollich, Andrew Miskoshek, John Manister, Paul Ketra, Joseph Swingler, Michael Nojoc, Michael Compus, Stephen Mida, George Kormus, and Joseph Ploskunka.

The mine, which is about eight miles from Dover, is flooded to a depth of several hundred feet, and the excitement among the foreigners is intense. The mines are surrounded to-night by members of the families of the missing men, and whenever any one appears from the shaft he is besieged by an excited throng begging for news. Miners who have worked here for years and who know of the lake in the bottom of the old shaft say it may be a week or more before the new shaft can be drained and the bodies recovered.

An idea of conditions underground here has been indicated when wells sunk in the vicinity have hurled water hundreds of feet into the air. The rock of which the range is composed is seamy and soft and back of the seams are ponds. A result has been that a great deal of pumping has been necessary in the mines. When the old shaft was abandoned the water soon accumulated to a great depth, and when the rock was loosened by the blast it poured in upon the men.

The first indication those above ground had that something had happened in the mines was soon after midnight, when signals sent below were unanswered. The skip, in which ore is hoisted to the surface, was drawn up, and found to be nearly full of water.

The twelve men who were drowned were at work at the bottom of the shaft. Men at work on a higher level, among them the men who fired the charge that opened the crack in the wall, were barely able to reach the skip level so fast did the water gain on them. In their mad rush the men fought desperately, and it may be that some were hurled back and drowned in their struggle for life.

News of the disaster spread quickly, and within half an hour practically the whole population was at the mines. Wives and children of miners who were missing stood about weeping, for several hours passed before it was definitely known who were dead. The mine officials did all they could for the grief-stricken people, permitting the women to wait in the engine room, where news of the progress of the rescue work was carried to them every few minutes.

Miners who went down to investigate said that the water was rising fast, and within two hours after the wall opened hope of recovering the bodies was abandoned, until the pumps could be started. Soon after the accident Coroner Totten of Dover was summoned, but no bodies were in sight, and it was realized that it might be many days before there were any.

County detectives are investigating, but they have confined their activities to questioning survivors. Company officials said they would aid in a thorough investigation. They said engineers had examined the wall recently, and reported it solid. The mines were started by the late Joseph Wharton of Philadelphia, and the company is one not connected with the Steel Trust. The company has blast furnaces at Wharton, near Dover, and mining properties in many parts of Pennsylvania, and other Eastern States.

J. R. KEENE RETURNING.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—James R. Keene, who for some months past has been in Europe in search of health, and who a few weeks ago underwent a serious operation for internal trouble, slipped quietly away from the Marylebone nursing home where he had been staying early on Wednesday morning.

He is now believed to be on his way to America. All information is refused at the nursing home beyond the statement that Mr. Keene had gone to America. On the same day Foxhall Keene left the Ritz Hotel, saying that he was going to Paris.

Inquiries at the steamship offices here fail to elicit any knowledge that Mr. Keene had booked his passage, although he may have done so under an assumed name, as it is known that he wished to avoid the excitement of an announced arrival in New York.

For a long time Mr. Keene's one hope has been to return home, but hitherto his doctors would not sanction the journey, so that it is understood his condition is greatly improved.

COPENHAGEN TO HEAR COOK.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COPENHAGEN, Oct. 20.—Dr. Cook, who is now in Brussels, will arrive here on Tuesday.

He is to give a lecture in the same hall where, two years ago, he received the gold medal of the Danish Geographic Society for his alleged discovery of the north pole.

W. K. PARK'S CREW SAVED.

Philadelphia Schooner's Men Picked Up by British Steamer.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—A report to Lloyds to-day says that the schooner whose crew was picked up by the British steamer Elaine at sea was the William K. Park. The Elaine, which was bound from Norfolk for Havre, signaled the news of the rescue to the British steamer Cayo Gitano, which reported the matter when off the Lizard yesterday. No details were given.

The schooner William K. Park was owned in Philadelphia and sailed from Bridgewater, N. S., on Sept. 26 for Buenos Aires.

MORE PROGRESS ON MOROCCO

Further Instructions on French Congo Concessions to Germany Approved.

PARIS, Oct. 20.—The Cabinet Council to-day approved certain additional instructions to the French Ambassador at Berlin, M. Cambon, relative to the French concession to Germany in French Congo.

A semi-official note issued this afternoon describes the Moroccan negotiations as having made "sensible progress" and adds, "a solution may be hoped for at a date relatively not far distant."

M'NAMARA TALESMEN EXCUSED BY COURT

Five Said They Would Not Inflict Death Penalty on Circumstantial Evidence.

SIX IN THE JURY BOX NOW

Defense Takes Position That No One Who Attended Victims' Funeral Can Be an Impartial Juror.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Oct. 20.—Out of eleven talesmen who sat in the jury box at the McNamara murder trial at the opening of court to-day only six were left when court adjourned until Monday. Of the six it is considered more than possible that two or perhaps three will find themselves on the jury as it is sworn in. Those locked up to-night after having been passed for cause by both sides were:

BAIN, ROBERT F., carpenter.
GREEN, F. D., orange grower.
MANNING, SEABORN, rancher.

It is possible that all of these will become members of the jury, no animus against any of them on either side being apparent to-night.

A. R. McIntosh, challenged by the State because of his opposition to infliction of the death penalty on circumstantial evidence, will be questioned by the court before he is held or excused.

George W. McKee, who says he is firmly convinced that The Los Angeles Times was blown up by dynamite, was under interrogation by the court at the close of to-day's session. He is not wanted by counsel for the defense, who assert that James B. McNamara, their client, could not have dynamited the building and caused the death of Charles J. Haggerty, for which he is being tried, because the building was blown up by gas. They therefore challenged McKee, and are awaiting a ruling by Judge Bordwell. McKee says he has no opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant.

A. C. Robinson, after being challenged because of his opposition to conviction on circumstantial evidence, was held by the court, the challenge being disallowed for the time.

T. W. Adams, Ernest F. Decker, E. J. Shower, Otto A. Jesson, and H. Y. Quackenbush all were excused upon challenges for indirect bias. This is the closest the State could come, under the California statute, to formal challenges, because each man said he would not inflict the death penalty upon circumstantial evidence, and Judge Bordwell's efforts to learn if this was their real state of mind seemed to reveal that it was.

Talesman Robert F. Bain, a carpenter over seventy years old, told Attorney Horton that he originated the first labor union in Los Angeles.

"Do you feel that because the attitude of The Times toward labor unions was considered pretty stringent, labor union men were justified in using unusual means?" asked Lawyer Horton.

"Yes, to hold their own."

He said his wife would not permit him to take The Times.

Bain was passed for cause.

That any one who attended the joint funeral of The Times victims, where sixteen coffins lay across the stage of a local theatre and heard the oration made on that occasion by the Rev. Robert J. (Bob) Burdette, pastor emeritus of the Temple Baptist Church, cannot be an impartial juror, was the position taken to-day by counsel for the defense.

It was announced that where it can be learned that a talesman sat through the afternoon where woman after woman fainted under stress of emotions induced by the grim scenes and by the eloquence of the speakers, that talesman will be challenged for cause. Whether the Rev. Mr. Burdette will be summoned into court to refresh the memory of these men was not stated.

James B. McNamara, accused of blowing up the Times Building, is agreeably surprised to find that of the talesmen examined thus far a proportion do not hold him responsible, and also have opinions that gas did it.

"I think that people of Los Angeles are fair," he said to-day, "and it looks as if we will get a jury. I certainly think I've had the best of it so far. Nearly every one of the talesmen says he can presume me innocent, and I am glad to see that most of them do not believe the dynamite theory."

BURNS ON McNAMARA TRIAL.

Detective Says McNamara's Guilt Is Proved by His Own Letters.

Detective William J. Burns lectured in the Horace Mann Auditorium last night to the Columbia University Politics Club on "Citizenship and Municipal Graft." Discussing the McNamara case he declared there was not a shadow of a doubt that The Los Angeles Times was blown up by the defendants.

Burns said there were documents which the courts of Indianapolis had not permitted the Los Angeles prosecutor to remove, which prove conclusively from their own correspondence that the defendants now on trial dynamited The Times.

"Why were you arrested for kidnapping?" asked a man in the audience.

"I was indicted as a sop to the labor vote," he replied, "not because they expected to convict me, but to discredit me."

Referring to municipal graft, Mr. Burns declared:

"It is not difficult to ferret it out. In fact, it would be very simple if citizens would interest themselves in practical politics. The people have permitted professional politicians to do their thinking for them. Our best citizens are always responsible for municipal graft, because so many of our best citizens fail to take an active interest in politics.

Show me an honest Mayor that finds corruption and wants to wipe it out, and I guarantee to do it."

An auditor wanted to know when the speaker intended to tackle Tammany Hall. Mr. Burns replied:

"Tammany Hall will be cleaned up when the people wake up."

In telling of how he had the crooks of San Francisco and Seattle put behind bars, Burns touched on the work of detectives, saying:

"Detectives, as a class, are the biggest lot of blackmailing crooks that ever escaped the penitentiary. Because of this, one of the first things to do in this detective business is to fortify yourself with a reputation for honesty and veracity. Then you won't be accused of double-crossing clients, as detectives are doing constantly. The word of a detective is never taken.

"There are no mysteries. If common sense and business judgment used in every-day affairs are applied to the work, you get results. Many believe that uncanny methods are used to get confessions, but the fact is you have only to follow the criminal's mind. That's why I'd rather deal with a smart crook. He can follow your argument.

"I have never been a respecter of persons when it comes to catching crooks. You can fill the penitentiary with the little fellows, and people forget it in a week, but get a big fellow in jail, and the people take notice."

DEMANDS PHONE CONNECTION

Independent Company Complains of Bell Interests to Commerce Board.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—One of the first cases before the Inter-State Commerce Commission involving inter-State telephones was filed to-day in a complaint by the Home Telephone Company of Clarksville, Tenn., against the Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Company, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company of New York, and the American Telephone and Telegraph Company of Tennessee. The amendment to the Elkins act, including telephones and telegraph lines in the scope of the statute, has been on the books over a year, but little effort has been made so far to apply it.

The controversy is one between an independent line and the Bell interests. The Home company says it has been deprived of connections for inter-State business by the defendant interests, and it asks the commission to compel the restoration of these connections. It would have the other companies required to furnish long-distance inter-State telephone service between Clarksville and points outside the State of Tennessee. It asks the commission to fix the reasonable charges for such service, and all necessary regulations.

Under the law telephone companies in inter-State business are common carriers, but the commission has never fully interpreted the commerce statutes in their application to these companies.

MUNSEY STARTS TRUST CO.

Publisher to Have a $2,000,000 Banking Institution in Washington.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—The Washington Times, a Munsey newspaper, makes this afternoon the following announcement:

"The first legal steps were taken today by attorneys for Frank Munsey toward the organization of the Munsey Trust Company, a two-million-dollar banking institution, to be located in Washington. This new banking company will do a general trust and banking business, and will be located in the Munsey Building, on Pennsylvania Avenue.

"The organization will be completed as soon as the necessary legal formalities can be complied with. Its banking room in the Munsey Building is fully equipped with vaults, desks, and everything necessary to do business. So far, therefore, as physical equipment is concerned, the company could open to-morrow. The fitting up of a banking room with a modern vault, if made to order, would usually require about six months' time, but the Munsey Trust Company will not have to incur such delay."

CHANGE PANAMA NAVAL PLANS

Huge Shipyard with Dry Docks Instead of Station for Warships.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—With the aid of his well-trained canal diggers and lock builders it is probable that Col. Goethals will break all records in the matter of drydock construction by building two great docks at Colon and having them completely equipped and ready for the reception of ships patronizing the Panama Canal by July, 1913.

All idea of establishing a great naval station at the Atlantic entrance of the Panama Canal has been abandoned, as President Taft strongly disapproves the plan, and Col. Goethals has now been instructed to build instead a shipyard for docking and repairing vessels of the mechant marine, although of course this will also be available for naval uses. The plant will include not only drydocks but machine shops and coaling wharves.

It was at first contemplated to have the drydock built by the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department, but Rear Admiral Halliday, the chief of the bureau, felt that Col. Goethals was in a better position to undertake the work.

INQUIRY INTO BOXER CLAIMS.

Committee on State Department Expenditures to Consider Them.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—The first of the investigating committees to resume work will be the ommiCttee on Expenditures in the State Department. Chairman Hamilin of the committee, and Representative Dent, the second member, have already arrived, and as there are only three members it is possible that hearings may be resumed to-morrow.

Last session the committee was occupied chiefly with the Day portrait case, and now they expect to devote their attention to the alleged irregular payment of the Ward claims from the Boxer indemnity fund.

RAISES BAN ON VICE REPORT.

Hitchcock Decides to Let It Pass Through the Mails.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—Postmaster General Hitchcock has revoked the original order of the Post Office Department excluding from the United States mails the report of the Vice Commission of the City of Chicago. After considering carefully the purpose of the report and the intent of the commission, Mr. Hitchcock has directed the Postmaster at Chicago to permit the mailing of the report.

In reaching this decision Mr. Hitchcock was influenced by the high character of the members of the commission and the evident sincerity of their motives.

The body of Mrs. Charles Cotta, wife of a Custom House employe, who disappeared from her home, 566 West 182d Street, on last Saturday night, was found yesterday afternoon floating in the Harlem River near the foot of 179th Street. Mrs. Cotta had suffered with nervous trouble for a year, and on Saturday night was traced from her home to the Speedway, where she disappeared. It is supposed that she committed suicide.

SYNDICATE AGENTS MUST KEEP FAITH

Court of Appeals Decides They May Not Covertly Sell Their Own Property to Associates.

HECKSCHER TO GET $237,000

Gaynor's Dissent in Appellate Division Sustained—Case Against Reorganizer of United States Iron.

In a decision for which the lawyers say there is no exact precedent the Court of Appeals has established the principle that if a syndicate organizer takes over in behalf of the syndicate any property that he covertly owns himself or has a concealed interest in he is liable to every subscriber who was unaware of his interest for the full amount of the funds subscribed.

The decision was rendered yesterday at Albany in the case of August Heckscher, former President of the Windsor Trust Company and of the Central Foundry Company, against William Edenborn, one of the original Directors of the United States Steel Corporation and now President of the Louisiana Railway & Navigation Company.

It arose out of an old deal, by which Edenborn was to join together a number of Southern coal and iron properties in the interest of associates in the American Steel and Wire Company, one of the principal companies of the United States Steel Corporation at the time of its organization.

Mr. Heckscher is awarded $237,000 damages, representing the original cash subscription to the consolidation syndicate of himself and the claimants who have assigned to him. There are other suits arising out of this particular promotion, and there are millions of dollars involved in other syndicate transactions in which the statute of limitations is not yet operative, lawyers in the financial district said yesterday, which may be brought into litigation by dissatisfied subscribers.

The decision of the Court of Appeals upholds the dissenting opinion of Mayor Gaynor as one of the Justices of the Appellate Division in Brooklyn which had reversed the decision of the lower court, and ends long litigation in which Stetson, Jennings & Russell, counsel of the United States Steel Corporation, appeared for William Edenborn, and Henry Wollman of Wollman & Wollman for Heckscher.

The syndicate which William Edenborn organized to purchase the United States Iron Company, which had property in Alabama and other places, included August Heckscher, Frank Baackes, one of the vice presidents of the American Steel and Wire Company, and several of that company's operating officials. The United States Iron Company was originally owned largely by John W. Gates, John Lambert, and others of the old steel group.

William Edenborn drew up a syndicate agreement by which he and his nephew, August Mann, and J. C. Walker were the syndicate managers. Edenborn's name was on the subscription agreement for $500,000, which it developed later it was his intention to pay in the stock of the United States Iron Company, of which he owned fifty per cent. The stock of this company was later put into the merger, which became the Sheffield Coal and Iron Company, at $700,000, of which $350,000 represented Edenborn's subscription, which Heckscher and his associates contended they believed was to be paid in cash, not knowing of his interest in the United States Iron Company. The members of the syndicate received for the $2,500,000 subscribed stock in the Sheffield Coal and Iron Company, which did not prove a success, and litigation was begun which developed that Edenborn had been the largest owner of the United States Iron Company.

The American Steel and Wire men assigned their claims to August Heckscher, who tendered back the stock which had been accepted by the syndicate members, and demanded repayment in full of the subscription money from William Edenborn. In the decision of the Court of Appeals, Justice Hiscock says:

> The principle that a person occupying a position of agent to purchase may not sell his own property to his principal is so elementary that it need only be stated. It must be quite as elementary and true that if one by representation or suppression of facts when he ought to speak induces another ignorantly to make a contract appointing the first his agent to buy and conferring upon him discretionary power to purchase his own property, the contract is voidable, and even if executed may be rescinded and the money recovered back upon restoration of what has been received. The defendant comes within these principles. He did not occupy the position of an ordinary vendor, but he was inviting others to confer upon him a fiduciary relationship. If he knew and they were ignorant of some fact which touched the very substance of that relationship and legally destroyed his ability to meet its full requirements, it was his duty to advise them of it, and for his failure so to do they were entitled to repudiate the agreement and avoid what had been done under it.

In his defense, William Edenborn, in addition to denying any liability at all, contend that under any circumstances he could not be liable for the entire amount put up by the complainants, but only for the proportionate amount of the assets that went into the property in which he was interested. This the court overruled, as it did also his contention that the cause of action, if any, lay against the syndicate and not against him individually.

Train Kills a Deer.

MOUNT KISCO, N. Y., Oct. 20.—One of the forty or so deer that have been roaming the woods north of this place was killed yesterday afternoon by failing to get out of the way of a locomotive on the Putnam Division of the New York Central at Nutwood. The deer's mate was close by, and waited beside the mangled body for an hour and a half, refusing to be frightened away. When Game Warden George C. Sutton arrived he buried the carcass, and the mate remained within a few yards all the time.

NO SCHENECTADY CARS RUN.

Special to The New York Times.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Oct. 20.—With practically every one walking the streets to-night wearing badges declaring, "We Walk" and "Arbitration," and with every trolley car stalled in the barns this evening, the newly organized street railway employes' union entertained strong hopes of winning recognition by the Schenectady Railway Company and of returning to work to-morrow.

The union strikers, who quit work on Thursday night, held a mass meeting to-night, and a committee was appointed to call upon General Manager E. F. Peck to-morrow morning to propose arbitration, although a committee from the union received no satisfaction when they called on Mr. Peck on the day of the strike.

The company began operations this morning with about two-thirds of its cars in charge of employes who had remained loyal. This number gradually dwindled down until there were but fifteen cars in operation. The strikers pursued the men working them, and within three hours had five or more cars in the barn. Then all the cars out were called in. Mr. Peck denied that strikebreakers would be employed. The company preferred temporarily to suspend business.

The first interurban car running into Troy this morning was stopped by a mob of about forty men, said to be employes of the Union Traction Company, who are sympathizing with the local strikers, and the motorman was clubbed into insensibility.

WEIDEMANN HURT IN TAXICAB

Young Woman with Glass Manufacturer in Pittsburg Ride Disappears.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Penn., Oct. 20.—C. A. Weidemann, a glass manufacturer of New York City, was badly hurt in a taxicab accident early yesterday morning near Carnegie Institute. A young woman, who was in the car, suffered bruises and cuts, but she disappeared before the police obtained her name.

Mr. Weidemann was taken to the Heney Hospital, where he is confined with scalp lacerations and bruises about the body. He refused to give the name of the woman passenger.

The machine was traveling along Forbes Street at a fast rate when it ran into an iron trolley post. The front wheels were torn off and Mr. Weidemann and the young woman were thrown against the front of the machine. The chauffeur escaped. A physician attended both, and the young woman then slipped away unnoticed and boarded a car for the city.

TURKEYS FOR NAVAL CREWS.

Newport Citizens Arranging for Thanksgiving Dinner and Cutter Race.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 20.—Citizens are to raise a fund to supply officers and men of the first division of the battleships of the Atlantic fleet, who arrive next month, with Rhode Island turkeys. If the money is subscribed turkeys will be sent to all the officers and men for their Thanksgiving dinner.

When the battleships arrive in Narragansett Bay, E. P. Garrettson, donor of the Narragansett Bay racing cup will consult with Rear Admiral Hugo Osterhaus to arrange for a cutter race with the Newport crews over the bay course. The cup was given by Mr. Garrettson in 1905, and was won that year by the Hibernian crew, which defeated the crew of the battleship Kearsarge.

STUDENTS IN FIST FIGHTS.

N. Y. U. Freshmen Dance for Sophomores and Rescuers Are Repulsed.

Because they failed to give the candidates for the football team a rub-down in the "gym," as prescribed by the sophomores of New York University, Arthur Weil, George Hermann, and Kenneth Schwartz, freshmen, were taken from the Hall of Fame at 7 o'clock last night to a dance hall at 170th Street and Jerome Avenue, where they were made to provide amusement for ninety-five second classmen.

In the meantime the freshmen, learning of the misfortune which had befallen their companions, hastened to the scene, and, despite the fact that they were outnumbered two to one, did not hesitate to give battle to the sophomores. At the hall the freshmen were driven from the doors, and continued the fight in the street with their fists until they were finally routed. The sophomores, elated at the victory, set free the captives.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY HAS NEW PRESIDENT

Dr. Murlin, in Inaugural, Tells How Municipal Universities Can Improve Cities.

PROBLEM OF THE PRESENT

Speaker Believes Return to Rural Life Will Follow in Time—Growth of Country Colleges.

BOSTON, Oct. 20.—Lemuel Herbert Murlin, LL. D., was inducted into the office of President of Boston University to-day with impressive ceremonies. The inaugural exercises were held in Trinity Episcopal Church, Copley Square, and were attended by a notable gathering of educators.

The induction services opened with prayer by the Rev. Dr. Alexander Mann, rector of Trinity Church, after which Ex-Gov. John L. Bates, President of the Board of Trustees of Boston University, presented the seal and charter of the institution to Dr. Murlin and formally installed him as President of the university.

President Murlin then delivered his inaugural address, his topic being "The University and the City." He said in part:

"The rise of State universities, the birth of the scientific spirit, the resurgence of the altruistic ideal—these three civilizing agencies have had a compelling influence in modern education. A fourth development in our National life is preparing us for the next great advance. It has to do with the growth of our cities, so rapid that we are not able to adjust ourselves to the swiftly changing economic conditions.

"Hitherto our colleges and universities have been located in the country, answering the needs of a social age when the major portion of our population was in the country. There has been some anxiety over the decline of rural population. It need not disturb us. The future will show a return to the country and an increase in the rural population. We shall need, therefore, not fewer, but more, of those institutions which have sedved us so well in the past. But the problem of our civilization is the problem of the city. It would seem, therefore, that if the university is to be a significant factor in our civilization it must continue in the future, as in the past, to live in the midst of the life which it serves. It follows, therefore, that the next advance in educational development will be the founding of the municipal university.

"Such an institution will profit by the educational experience of the race. It will recognize that we cannot have better cities until we have better citizens; that the man is greater than the machine; that training a man in making a life is of vaster importance than helping him to make a livelihood; that making a life must be the first consideration, and that in so doing the making of a livelihood is the more certain.

"The municipal university will need the usual equipment of the lecture room, the laboratory, the library and the shop, but it will find its best equipped laboratory, its largest library, its best force, anvil, and bench in the city in whose heart it has its being.

"Thus might every department of municipal service be related to a corresponding department in the university; the instruction in the lecture room would thereby be vitalized, and, in turn, the city would have skillful, intelligent, scientific, unselfish co-operation for every agency that has to do with the welfare of the city.

"The remarkable growth of colleges and universities has been due largely to the fact that they have, in the main, encouraged a rational religion, a sane morality, and lofty ideals. To these ideals the Municipal University must ever be devoted. With the increased testing that comes to moral character in our ever-increasing complex life there must be a clearly determined moral code, an unflinching moral integrity, an unfailing moral strength, and an ample, eager, and alert moral efficiency. He who betrays a moral trust is guilty of high treason, and his name should take a far lower place than that of him who betrays his country on field of battle.

"Our foes are not in China, or Japan, or Germany, or England; our foes are here, within our borders, among ourselves. They are the men in public life who are lacking in truth and moral earnestness. Wherever we fortify righteousness we are building forts for the defense of the Republic; wherever we inspire moral earnestness we are fostering patriotism. If the universities fail in moral training, they fail utterly."

WOMAN CLUBS INTRUDER.

She Administers a Severe Drubbing to Man Who Invaded Her Home.

Special to The New York Times.

AMITYVILLE, L. I., Oct. 20.—With the aid of a thick club Mrs. Charles G. Wingate several days ago put to flight an intruder who had invaded her home. She says she believes the man was demented.

Mrs. Wingate's husband is a son of Gen. George W. Wingate of Brooklyn. She was at home when the man appeared, apparently with something to sell, although he either could not speak English or pretended ignorance of the language. Instead of buying his wares, she gave him some money, and sent him away.

A few minutes later, entering her library, she found the man standing beside the table in the centre of the room. Without a word she grabbed him and hustled him to the doorway. There she demanded to know why he had entered the house without permission. He did not answer, but fought his way back into the library.

"He was a big, husky fellow, with finely developed shoulders," said Mrs. Wingate to-day. "But I just grabbed him by the shoulders and a severe tussle ensued. When we reached the hall I saw a thick stick lying on the floor that one of the children had cut in the woods the day before. I grabbed this, and beat him with it. I hit him anywhere I could, while he tried to defend himself and protect his head with his hands. I am strong and not afraid of anything, and I didn't spare him a bit. He left the house on a run."

Mrs. Wingate said word had been brought to her to-day that a man answering the description of her visitor had invaded a card party of women in Lindenhurst, but had escaped before the police could arrest him.

Small Fire on the Florida.

For the third time since the battleship Florida has been under construction a fire was discovered yesterday on the deck of the vessel. It was caused by defective insulation, which also started a previous blaze. The fire was quickly put out by workmen and members of the crew after it caused slight damage. The vessel is being wired for illuminating the ship for the big naval review at the end of this month, and two of the wires became crossed, causing a short circuit.

IN CELL AFTER JOY RIDE.

Youth Enjoys Exporter Rodriguez's Auto Fun and Takes His Overcoat.

By posing as a "millionaire's son" Raymond Zascusci, a telephone operator, of 112 West Sixty-first Street, as he described himself, spent an enjoyable evening with two pretty girls and an exporter in the latter's automobile on last Sunday night, Oct. 15, but he was tempted by a fine overcoat, and this led to his undoing last night.

Zascusci was arrested at the instigation of the victim, Señor L. Rodriguez, living at the Hotel Empire, Broadway and Sixty-third Street, who sleuthed around town every night since the Sunday night "joy ride," and finally located Zascusci at Ninth Avenue and Twenty-third Streset. Señor Rodriguez called a policeman, and the "millionaire's son" was taken to the old West Twentieth Street Station in the very automobile in which he had had such a good time less than a week before.

According to Rodriguez, Zascusci came to him on last Sunday afternoon and offered to hire the automobile for the evening, paying $5 an hour. The exporter thought to pick up a little extra money, and, especially as two pretty young women were to make up the party, he agreed. He said that Zascusci represented himself as the son of a Cleveland banker.

Early on Sunday evening the party started out, but Zascusci, instead of paying the bill for the trip, told Señor Rodriguez to do so, according to the latter, and said he would make good when he got a one-hundred-dollar check cashed at the Waldorf Hotel, where he said he was stopping.

The party visited the Waldorf, the Hotel Ansonia, and the Clarendon, in Brooklyn, and then started out for a spin on Long Island. The trip lasted seven hours altogether, and in that time Zascusci, according to Rodriguez, borrowed $2 from him.

Then they returned to the Waldorf, and Zascusci, accompanied by the two girls, went into the hotel "to get the check cashed." Rodriguez waited until 1 A. M., and then decided to investigate. He could not find either Zascusci or the girls, nor could he find a $40 overcoat that was in the automobile. Zascusci admitted taking the overcoat. He was charged with grand larceny.

DANGER TO RODGERS IN WORN-OUT WIRES

ENGINE FAILS NEAR AUSTIN

Coast-to-Coast Flier Is Now Within 70 Miles of San Antonio—Resumes Flight To-day.

By C. P. RODGERS.

By Telegraph to the Editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

KYLE, Texas, Oct. 20.—Because of a serious accident to my motor car that only my chauffeur knew about until this morning, we had trouble in getting another auto, and did not get away from my hotel in Waco until 11:05 A. M. I did not fly from Waco until 11:20 o'clock. I circled their twenty-two-story skyscraper for fifteen minutes and also around the town. The skyscraper is a model one that even New York would be proud of.

My train pulled out and I flew along in the back of it. The train stopped near a water tank and I shot on ahead. I turned around and saw that they had started, but I was tired of fooling and waiting for them, so I went on. I had a fine flying day, with a slight wind back of me, a five to eight mile breeze. After I had picked up a town twenty miles distant I looked back for my special train and could barely see it. I started back to see if it was moving or what it was doing, and after returning five miles I found it was a bad job and gave it up and decided I would have to travel without it, as they seemed to be simply crawling along.

I circled over Temple and then picked up Granger and landed there according to my schedule. I stayed there forty-five minutes and then got away again. My train was approaching while I gave a small exhibition at Granger. I circled the special and wondered again what the matter was that they did not move faster, but gave it up and left them behind. Granger is a small but very energetic town. After flying through several towns I reached Austin, the capital of Texas. I landed in a field, picked out for me, at 2 o'clock. I had been doing sixty miles an hour. I stayed there an hour and a half, got gasoline and oil, and took the air at 3:45. I circled the Capitol building and then flew down to the station and passed on, flying at a height of about 500 feet. I saw an express train ten miles off, and soon picked it up and passed it.

Suddenly one of my intake valves blew out and the head dropped down and broke a hole through the piston.

No San Antonio to-night. My motor has to be repaired, and it will take a number of hours. I volplaned to a good field about eight miles from San Marcos, and landed there at 4 o'clock.

C. P. RODGERS.

Special to The New York Times.

AUSTIN, Texas, Oct. 20.—C. P. Rodgers's aeroplane flight across the continent was interrupted at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon by a breakdown of his engine which forced him to make a gliding descent from a height of 1,500 feet eighteen miles south of here and two miles north of Kyle.

Rodgers landed in a cornfield and was uninjured. He spent the rest of the afternoon making repairs to the engine, and expects to have it in condition to resume his flight to-morrow morning. His wife and mother, who were traveling close behind him in a special train, witnessed the descent, and are spending the night with the aviator.

WACO, Texas, Oct. 20.—When Aviator Rodgers learned of the death of Eugene Ely at Macon, Ga., he made a minute inspection of his biplane to-day and probably saved himself from a serious accident, for he discovered damage that caused him to postpone his departure from Waco for two hours.

The elevator and rudder wires were worn so thin that the aviator doubted their lasting through to-day's proposed flight of 188 miles from Waco to San Antonio. Repair work was begun at once.

It was 11:15 o'clock when Rodgers resumed his flight, with San Antonio as his objective point.

Flying high and steadily, Rodgers passed over Bartlett, fifty-five miles south of here, at 12:25 P. M. A light north breeze was at his back. His machine seemed to be working perfectly. He stopped at Granger for a few minutes and reached Georgetown, Texas, at 1:25 P. M., flying at an altitude of about 1,000 feet. Georgetown is seventy-five miles from Waco.

At Austin, 100 miles from Waco, the aviator alighted at 1:55 P. M. and started again for San Antonio at 3:34 P. M. He expected to make San Antonio, eighty-eight miles from Austin, before dark, but his engine worked badly and he came down again eighteen miles south of Austin. His record for the day was 118 miles. He is about seventy miles northeast of San Antonio.

ROBINSON AT ROCK ISLAND.

ROCK ISLAND, Ill., Oct. 20.—Hugh Robinson, the aviator who is on his way from Minneapolis to New Orleans in a hydro-aeroplane, arrived here at 3:57 o'clock this afternoon, making the trip from Clinton, Iowa, his previous stop, 36 miles from here, in 35 minutes. He will resume his journey to-morrow.

NO LIGHT ON ELY'S DEATH.

Cause of Fatal Accident to Aviator Unlikely to be Ascertained.

MACON, Ga., Oct. 20.—The body of Eugene Ely, the aviator who was killed by a fall with his aeroplane at the State Fair Grounds here yesterday afternoon, was sent to Davenport, Iowa, to-day.

The cause of the accident has not been ascertained, and it is hardly probable that it ever will. There was no wind at the time. The machine was in perfect condition when Ely left the ground with it, as he had only a little while before risen to a height of 3,100 feet.

DAVENPORT, Iowa, Oct. 20.—Plans for the funeral of Eugene Ely will not be made until his wife arrives here from New York. N. D. Ely, the aviator's father, to-day left for Chicago where Mrs. Ely will arrive to-morrow morning. The party will reach here on Saturday.

ROCHESTER MAIL BY AIRMEN.

Special Delivery Arranged for Aviation Meet Beginning To-day.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—The Postmaster at Rochester, N. Y., was to-day authorized to arrange for the collection and delivery of mail by aeroplane at the aviation meet beginning there to-morrow.

The mail will be carried either by Lincoln Beachey or R. C. St. Henry. The meet is to be given as a benefit for the family of John J. Frisbie, the Rochester aviator, who recently lost his life while giving exhibition flights at Norton, Kan.

MAGAZINE DAY IN COURT.

Judge Quizzes Wise on Alleged Discrimination Against Review of Reviews

Argument on the preliminary injunction asked by The American Review of Reviews Company to restrain the Post Office officials from discriminating against its publication by sending it to the Pacific Coast by fast freight instead of by the regular mail trains was heard yesterday by Judge Ward in the United States Circuit Court. The charge of discrimination is based on the fact that certain rivals of The American Review of Reviews are still carried by fast mail, and in the complaint special mention was made of The Outlook, of which Col. Roosevelt is contributing editor, and The Literary Digest. It was also alleged that a number of other publications were permitted to use the regular mail trains "for no valid public reason, but for personal or private reasons."

Joseph P. Cotton, Jr., counsel for The American Review of Reviews Company, challenged the right of the Postmaster General to discriminate between one publication and another.

"They pay the same postage," he said, "and should get the same service. Last month, the first of the new order of things, The Review of Reviews was taken to the Pacific Coast from six to ten days later than its rivals, The Outlook and The Literary Digest. If it happens again this month they are very likely to obtain our subscribers whose subscriptions run out this month."

District Attorney Wise, appearing for Postmaster General Hitchcock, declared that the motion for an injunction was a clear attempt to supersede executive by judicial power, and a usurpation of executive functions. The Postmaster General's discretion, he argued, cannot be reviewed by any court, and he has the right to decide by what method magazines and periodicals are to be carried in the mails.

"If the Postmaster in this city," asked Judge Ward, "read my letter, could he not be enjoined?"

Mr. Wise replied that that was not an act of the Postmaster prescribed by law, and as it would be illegal it could be enjoined. But canals, plank roads, railroads and roads of every description are post roads, if the Postmaster General so orders, and the sending of mails by them is within his discretion.

"Why, mails could be sent by steer-car as much as by express if the Postmaster General desired it," declared the District Attorney.

"The complaint is not that you put The Review of Reviews in a freight car," pointed out the court, "but that you discriminate against it. If the Postmaster sent, say The World, THE TIMES, and The Journal by express, and left out The Herald, would that be—"

"That would be a political matter," interrupted Mr. Wise, "which could be settled at the ballot box, not in the courts."

"I think the Court would be disposed to act," said Judge Ward with a smile.

Decision was reserved, and both sides will submit briefs and affidavits.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—Assurance is given at the Post Office Department that no discrimination is being made against The Review of Reviews in the mail transportation of that magazine. Under the general order issued several weeks ago by Postmaster General Hitchcock all magazines, so far as practicable, are now being shipped by the Post Office Department to distributing centers by fast freight. Some of the magazine publishers have objected to the new system, but a majority have acceded to it, although it may require them to advance slightly their publication days.

NO GAS IN HIGH BRIDGE.

Water Main Bursts and Wrecks Gas Main Alongside It.

A broken water main deprived practically all of High Bridge of its gas supply last night, and where there were no electric lights, candles dimly glowed and lamps and lanterns were pressed into service by those fortunate enough to have them. But it was the housewives of the district who felt the lack of gas the most, for with few exceptions they were without fuel with which to cook the evening meal. It resulted in great business for the delicatessen shops.

About 5 o'clock in the evening a six-inch water main at Ogden Avenue and 170th Street burst with force enough to fracture a gas main running parallel with it. For a distance of about eleven blocks the big gas pipe was filled with water, and the supply of gas effectually checked. The company estimated that about 1,200 gaslights were put out of commission. Before midnight the gas men had the water pumped out of the main and preparations were made to repair the pipe. It was expected that the repair work would be completed early this morning.

SAYS FRANCE LEADS WORLD IN AVIATION

DEPLORES INACTIVITY HERE

Says This Country Is Doing Almost Nothing in Flying, and Germany Little More.

Cortlandt Field Bishop, First Vice President, and, in the absence of Allan A. Ryan, Acting President of the Aero Club of America, arrived in New York last night on the French liner Provence after an absence of six months in Europe and Africa.

While in Europe, particularly in France, Mr. Bishop said that he made it a point to keep in touch with all matters connected with aviation, and that besides witnessing the finishes of several of the great European circuit races he also spent much time at Rheims, where he observed the elimination tests now being conducted under the auspices of the French Department of War, the outcome of which will determine the two types of machines that the French Army is to adopt for the use of the officers of the "air arm" of the service.

"Every time that I go abroad," said Mr. Bishop last night, "and I am abroad about half of each year, I come home realizing how far behind we are in aviation. I do not think that we appreciate here the importance of the military competition at Rheims. It has been going on all this month, and will last up to Nov. 1. The competition is the result of the determination of the French Government to order a large number of machines for military purposes, and the meeting now going on at Rheims is for the purpose of selecting the best types for the army.

"The conditions prescribed call for a machine that will carry three persons, an operator, and two observers. Each machine must land in three different kinds of country without being damaged, and after each landing must be taken apart and brought back to the field, where it is again assembled and made ready for the next test. After all these tests are made a final test of speed, in which the successful machine must go 200 miles, is required, and at the end of that test the winners of the competition will be announced.

"To the machine decided to be the best for military purposes a prize of $20,000 will be awarded, and ten machines at $5,000 each ordered by the Government. The second best machine will receive a prize of $10,000 and the owners an order for five of them at $5,000 each.

"There are at least thirty different types of machines in the competition, and some of the types are of a kind never seen before in France or any other country. There are all sorts of biplanes and monoplanes, combinations of the two, triplanes, and others that look like the animals of prehistoric times as much as anything else. Some of them have shown splendidly in the air, and others have been unable to get off the ground. Some of the engines are of 150 horse power. If America could see what France is doing it would open her eyes as to the military future of the aeroplane.

"There is also no doubt that France is far ahead of all her neighbors in aviation. Germany does not seem to be making much progress, and still sticks to a great extent to the dirigible. England has shown progress during the last year, and Italy is coming up, and over here in America we are almost standing still."

DESERTED HIS BABY BOY.

He Wore a Diamond When He Left Him with a Janitress.

Mrs. Mary Schneider, janitress of the apartment house at 4,387 Third Avenue, the Bronx, noticed a young man sitting on the front steps of the house about noon yesterday, holding a baby about two years old in his arms. It was a little blue-eyed boy, and he was crying lustily for something to eat. Mrs. Schneider spoke to the man, and he said that he had to wait there for a friend, and the janitress, sorry for the child, told them to come to her apartment, and that she would give the baby food.

Mrs. Schneider was called to one of the apartments on the upper floor soon afterward, and when she returned the man was gone. The baby was playing about happily with two of her children.

"Daddy's gone," he told her, when she questioned him, but further than that she could get little information from the child. His name he said was "Sonny."

Mrs. Schneider did not notify the police yesterday, and said that if the man did not return she might adopt the boy, although she has several children of her own. "He's a cute little fellow, and might as well play around with the rest of the youngsters," she told a reporter.

The man who deserted "Sonny" was described by Mrs. Schneider as about 27 years old, 5 feet 9 inches in height, and of medium weight. He wore a dark suit and a brown derby hat, and on his finger was a large diamond ring. The only clue to the identity of the child were the initials "J. B." on the lining of a little blue overcoat.

URGES TRADE WITH EGYPT.

American Consul at Alexandria Says Everything There Is Imported.

At the headquarters of the National Association of Manufacturers, 30 Church Street, David Birch, American Consul in Alexandria, discussed yesterday the prospects of American exporters invading Egypt. He thought the chances excellent, and the endeavor worth while. Egypt, he said, imported annually merchandise to the extent of about $117,000,000. Of this $70,000,000 was manufactured goods, he said, and less than one per cent. of it from this country. The nations doing the bulk of the business, he said, were England, France, Germany, Italy, and Austria, in the order named. The duty is eight per cent.

"Egypt manufactures nothing except the cigarette," said Consul Birch, "and the tobacco for this is imported. Everything is brought from other parts of the world. Once we succeed in establishing a market for many kinds of American-made articles that are not to-day found in Egypt, this trade will become a profitable one."

He said the commercial invasion would not be a success until American exporters dealt with the Egyptians as European nations do, allowing them three or four months in which to pay bills. He said that the European house generally charged about thirty per cent. above the normal price, which the Egyptian buyer was willing to pay if he could get long credit.

BATTERY PARK ATHLETICS.

Mayor Gaynor sent this letter yesterday to Park Commissioner Stover:

> Sir: Let the running track and athletic field be laid out and prepared in Battery Park. Our young fellows desire to do something else than lolling on benches. Very truly yours,
> W. J. GAYNOR, Mayor.

The Mayor inspected the site for the athletic field with Commissioner Stover several days ago, and at that time expressed himself as being in favor of the plan.

Brooklyn House Strangely Robbed.

A $2,000 burglary in the home of William Jenkins Bluff, 60 Pierrepont Street, Brooklyn, discovered yesterday, when he returned from his country home in Bay Shore, L. I., is puzzling the police. No windows were broken, and the doors show no signs of being forced. The place is equipped with burglar alarms, which failed to go off.

ICE INVESTIGATION DROPPED BY COURT

Magistrate Appleton Dismisses the Complaint at the Prosecutor's Request.

NO EVIDENCE OF COMBINATION

Demand During the Hot Spell Was So Heavy the Companies Could Not Supply It, the Court Finds.

At the suggestion of Assistant District Attorneys William A. De Ford and Harold S. Demming, Magistrate Charles W. Appleton dismissed yesterday the complaint against Wesley M. Oler and other officials of the Knickerbocker Ice Company. The complaint was made early last Summer and much evidence was taken.

In a brief which De Ford and Demming submitted to the Magistrate they said that the evidence showed that the company brought more ice to the city in the two weeks of intense heat last July than in a similar period of a preceding year, and that this was true of the independent ice companies also, but that the demand was so unprecedented that the Knickerbocker and independent companies were compelled to confine their sales to regular customers, and to turn away all others.

The brief stated that there was nothing to prove that the companies had failed to do all they could to supply ice to all, and that there was not evidence produced to show that there had been a conspiracy to increase prices.

"The evidence did tend to show," the brief continued, "that a very considerable supply of ice available for sale to the people of this city is sold by the various companies dealing in it at a substantially uniform price, but there was not, in the opinion of the District Attorney, any evidence upon which it could be successfully maintained that the condition arose as the result of an agreement between the companies selling it, the general effect of others being to suggest that the smaller companies for reasons sufficient to themselves, simply adopted the prices charged by the Knickerbocker Ice Company.

"The evidence also tends to show that the American Ice Company withdrew from doing business in this State as a matter of form only, and that it is in effect still transacting the same business that it used to do, although it now operates through the instrumentality of subservient corporations instead of operating directly. In the opinion of the District Attorney this does not, in the present state of the law, constitute any violation of the law."

Magistrate Appleton in dismissing the case said:

"So far as I have been able to discover, there is no evidence that would authorize or justify me in issuing a warrant for the arrest of anybody for any violation of the law alleged in the complaint. I agree with the District Attorney in every respect. I will issue no warrant."

HONOR SHEPARD AND ABRAHAM ABRAHAM

Mayor Gaynor Pays Eloquent Tribute to Both at Brooklyn Memorial Service.

WERE GREAT MEN, HE SAYS

Academy of Music Crowded with Friends of Both—Ex-Mayor Low and Dr. Cadman Also Speak.

Memorial services for Abraham Abraham, merchant and philanthropist, and Edward M. Shepard, lawyer and statesman, were held last night in the Brooklyn Academy of Music under the auspices of the Board of Directors of the Academy. Addresses were made by Mayor Gaynor, ex-Mayor Low, and the Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, pastor of the Central Congregational Church.

Mr. Abraham of the firm of Abraham & Straus died on June 28 last, while on a trip in the St. Lawrence region. Mr. Shepard died just a month later at Lake George. Both were residents of Brooklyn practically all their lives, and both were members of the Board of Directors of the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

Invitations had been sent to relatives and friends of both, and the auditorium was crowded. Among the guests were Controller Prendergast, ex-Controller Metz, Borough President Steers, Chief Magistrate Otto H. Kempner, Gardiner D. Mathews, and C. Augustus Haviland, Charles H. Schieren, exMayor of Brooklyn, presided.

Mayor Gaynor, who said that he had known both Mr. Shepard and Mr. Abraham intimately, paid tribute to them, saying:

"It is entirely fitting that we pause and turn aside for an hour to consider and commemorate the virtues and lives of these two great men so recently gone from us. The aggregate of the human race is everything. The individual is nothing, except in so far as he is enabled to lift up and ennoble the whole.

"Mr. Shepard was an exact contemporary of mine. We began, I think, in the same year here in Brooklyn, and I watched him and saw him ever after. He was an inspiration to me, as well as to others. His ideals were of the highest. He did not attain to all of his ideals, or even to many of them during his life. My friends, that is the fate of all persons of high ideals.

"And, although it may appear to us that he should have arrived at the highest points, of President, or Governor, or Senator, which some of us strove hard to advance him to, yet, my friends, although he did not, yet his life did not fail. It is not those in office who do the most for the human race. That is done by people like Mr. Shepard and others, who work at their ideals and uplift the human race. He was entirely content, even though he could not be Senator. He told me so.

"Let us bow in reverence to him tonight, for he was a great character. He was one of the most accomplished men I ever knew. He was one of the best men I ever knew. He was one of the justest men I ever knew, just to everybody and mean to nobody. He was a broad man and a great man, and what he did will live not only here and hereafter, but will live in other places hereafter as well and for generations to come.

"Of Mr. Abraham I can also speak. I doubt if I ever knew a more perfect character. He knew the infirmities of men and women. He was kind to their infirmities. He strove to ideals, and yet all the time stooped down to those around him. He knew that all were not capable of understanding ideals, and therefore he bent to them, and was kind to them and charitable to them.

"He was a large men in every sense. All the virtues were blended in him in the way and with such perfect poise as to make a perfect man. He always reminded me really of the seers, of which has race produced so many—the wise man, the prudent man, the charitable man, the good man. How all these virtues get united in one person we do not really understand until we read some of the characters of the Old Testament. And such a character was Abraham Abraham."

Seth Low commented on the loyalty that both of these men bore to the Academy of Music and the interest they took in its advancement.

"And just as the notes of different instruments blend in the music of an orchestra," he concluded, "so these two lives, each in its own way, struck the same inspiring chord of a fine public spirit."

The Rev. Dr. Cadman, speaking particularly of Mr. Abraham, said:

"The memory of this man became a sacred deposit the moment he escaped the bonds of time and sense. He fought a sturdy battle against precarious health and hampering conditions. He coveted nothing for his own sake, in honor preferring others. And while some loudly prated of their devotion and pushed their way to the centre of observation he shrank into the background and toiled that his fellows might have benefit therefrom."

PORTO RICO'S GRIEVANCES.

Judge Dominguez Says Natives Want American Citizenship.

MOHONK LAKE, N. Y., Oct. 20.—In addressing the Lake Mohonk Conference of Friends of the Indians and Other Dependent Peoples to-day, Jorge V. Dominguez, Judge of the Humacao District Court, Porto Rico, discussed the five main grievances entertained by the people of Porto Rico, as, first, lack of American citizenship; second, encroachment of the executive upon the legislative branch of the Government; third, lack of an elective Senate; fourth, control of the executive, or in other words, lack of self-government; and, fifth, indefiniteness of the political status of the island.

He declared that Porto Ricans want to be citizens of the United States.

"Porto Rico is the advance post of the United States in their peaceful war for commercial and political pre-eminence in America," said Judge Dominguez. "If you treat Porto Rico rightfully and make of us contented, happy American citizens and bestow upon us the fullest self-government, you will eventually become the mightiest among the mighty nations of the world. The prejudices entertained by other American nations will be banished and the justice done to Porto Rico will be returned to you in the appreciation, the confidence and the love of the rest of the New World."

Dr. Martin C. Brumbaugh of Philadelphia declared that the failure of Congress to admit the Porto Ricans to citizenship was the blackest blot on the colonial record of the United States.

McFARLAND STILL HELD.

Suggestion Made by Cyanide Victim's Husband Supports Suicide Theory.

Allison McFarland, advertising manager of the Crocker-Wheeler Electrical Company of Ampere, N. J., whose wife was found dead in bed of cyanide of potassium poisoning last Wednesday morning, was detained yesterday in the Fifth Police Precinct Station, where he had been kept through the night. No charge has been made against him, and he is not under arrest, though he is not allowed to leave the police station, where he is kept, not in a cell, but in the witness room. The body of his wife was sent to her father, George Trockett, of Rockland, Me., yesterday.

The detention of McFarland has resulted from the substitution by him of the poison for the harmless contents of a medicine bottle which his wife was accustomed to use for a headache remedy. McFarland said at first that he had notified his wife of this change when he got the poison to clean jewelry with. Later he admitted that he had not cautioned her, though he had changed the label on the bottle for one distinctly marked "Poison."

The woman was discovered dead when McFarland returned Wednesday morning to his home from a trip to Manhattan, where he had taken his six-year-old son Robert to the electrical show. It was thought at first that she had died of heart disease, but County Physician McKenzie made an autopsy which revealed the poison. McFarland was detained first on Thursday afternoon on his return from Philadelphia, where he had gone Wednesday night, saying that he wanted to arrange with his relatives about the funeral of his wife.

Prosecutor Mott is striving to find a motive for suicide or for homicide if it be proved that the woman's death was not accidental. So far he has met with no success. McFarland is said to have suggested that his wife worried unnecessarily over financial matters and to have admitted that he protested at his wife's extravagance.

Beyond this the Prosecutor had found no motive. The McFarlands seemed to be happy, and it is known that McFarland received a salary of $3,000 a year.

Last night after the removal of Mrs. McFarland's body the police collected a batch of letters in the McFarland home addressed both to husband and wife and these were given to Prosecutor Mott.

TAFT RE-ENTERS WYOMING.

Greets Crow Scout, Who Escaped the Massacre of Custer's Troops.

SHERIDAN, Wyo., Oct. 20.—President Taft and his party re-entered Wyoming to-day. He was met here by United States Senator Warren and Congressman Mondell, who will escort him through the State. The local programme included an inspection of Fort Mackenzie and a speech at the City Hall.

At the station here when the Taft train came in was Curley, the Crow scout, who is supposed to have been the only man with Gen. Custer to escape in the Little Big Horn fight. Curley reported the news of the massacre of the Custer troops. Mr. Taft shook hands with him as he passed.

The President again made it clear in a speech at Newcastle to-night that it is his intention to enforce the Sherman Anti-Trust act, no matter how much offending combinations sought mercy.

"Some companies are coming in voluntarily to divide themselves up, and just as we are about to reach a proper and successful Administration of the law, we begin to find there are some people who object to the Administration because we are prosecuting offending trusts and enforcing the law.

"It is a case where the Administration is going to be damned if it does not and damned if it does. Our understanding in the Administration is that when the President swore to defend the legislation and enforce the law it meant something, and when there was a law upon the statute books for twenty years to suppress these combinations against Inter-State trade, it was his business and the business of all under him to enforce the law, and that is what we are doing and propose to do, no matter whether we be damned or not."

MRS. GREENE GETS DIVORCE.

Freed in Utah, She Says, Answering Husband's Suit Here.

The divorce suit of Ernest H. Greene, the English mining expert, in which he names Orson Kilborn, a Columbia student, son of Horace M. Kilborn, Vice President of the National City Bank, came before Supreme Court Justice Bischoff yesterday when a motion was made on behalf of Mrs. Greene for alimony and counsel fees. Justice Bischoff heard no arguments, but accepted briefs and reserved decision.

Replying to the charge that she frequently accompanied Kilborn on automobile rides, Mrs. Greene names five separate offenses of which she alleges her husband was guilty, asserting that on one occasion, in San Bernardino County, Cal., Greene was shot. The papers relate that Mrs. Greene has been divorced this week in Salt Lake City, where she is now living with her three children in the home of her parents. She alleges also that her husband has abandoned her and failed to provide since they separated.

PANIC OVER MEXICO REVOLT.

Troops Held Ready to Act Against Rebels in Tabasco and Yucatan.

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 20.—Though the so-called Reyes revolt in Tabasco and Southern Yucatan is not generally regarded as important, the Federal Government and population of the peninsula are in a panicky state. Troops are held at Merida, the capital of Yucatan, with a train ready to transport them to disaffected points should the report of an uprising prove true. There is great excitement over a rumor that a mysterious ship landed arms and ammunition on the Yucatan coast.

A transport is held ready at Vera Cruz to carry troops to Tabasco if necessary.

The boldness of the Zapatista chiefs is indicated in the demand which they sent to Ismael Rivero, cashier of the San Rafael paper mill at Ozumba, the largest plant of the kind in the republic. They asked for 3,000 pesos, and threatened to attack the place if the money was not paid.

From Mazatlan comes the news that Gen. Banderas, the erstwhile self-styled Governor of that town, who had promised to be peaceable, is, with others, collecting troops and guns in Culiacan Rosales to resist the Federals who are going there to pacify the State of Sinaloa.

The election returns thus far give Pino Suarez 8,238 votes, President de la Barra 4,956, and Dr. Vasquez Gomez 2,606 out of a total of 16,004 cast for Vice President. This indicates a safe majority for Pino Suarez. Two States and two Territories have not yet reported.

OSBORNE SAYS VICE IS SAFE IN ALBANY

DOUBLE PAY FOR SHERIFFS

In Addition to Salaries They Received Per Diem Rate as Court Attendants—Bonuses Paid for Advertising.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Oct. 20.—William Barnes, Jr., Chairman of the Republican State Committee and Republican leader of Albany County, was mentioned frequently to-day in the evidence presented before the Senate Committee, which is investigating conditions in Albany City and County offices. Statements were also placed on the record to show that the rules of the Police Department were so framed as to protect vice. Theodore Cocheu of the American Audit Company of New York testified that in a conversation this morning Michael V. Dolan, manager of The Albany Argus, told him that Mr. Barnes dictated to whom the public printing contracts should go, and that The Argus was obliged to give the Journal Company, of which Mr. Barnes is President, a bonus for contracts.

Mr. Dolan on the stand later denied that he had used the name of Mr. Barnes, but admitted that in order to get the work he was obliged to give the Journal Company a bonus or commission.

The testimony of Mr. Cocheu as to the conversation with Mr. Dolan was corroborated by W. C. Crim, also of the American Audit Company, who added that Mr. Dolan had referred to Mr. Barnes as "boss." When James W. Osborne asked what Mr. Barnes was boss of, the witness said that Mr. Dolan did not explain.

At this point Chairman Bayne of the committee identified Mr. Barnes on the record of the committee. Mr. Dolan told the Chairman he knew Mr. Barnes as President of the Journal Company, and that by common report he was the Republican leader of Albany County and the Chairman of the Republican State Committee.

Mr. Osborne, the chief inquisitor of the committee, while Edward B. Cantine, Commissioner of Public Safety, was on the stand, called attention to the rules of the Police Department. He said there was nothing in the rules which would lead a policeman to proceed against the proprietor of a disorderly resort if he should discover one. Mr. Osborne contended that the rules licensed disorderly resorts and operated to protect crime from citizens rather than to protect citizens from crime.

While on the stand Mr. Cantine referred to printed rules, which he declared were ample instructions for the police to govern their course in the case of crime of any nature.

Commissioner Cantine admitted that there is a section of the city known as the Tenderloin, and that "suspected vice" had been segregated in that part of the city.

"Isn't it the policy of your administration to segregate vice?" he was asked.

"I believe in segregation," replied the Commissioner. "But our policy has been to suppress vice."

"Do you think you have succeeded?" queried Mr. Osborne.

"As well as can be done by human beings," was the reply.

Mr. Osborne then introduced evidence in support of the charge that court attendants were appointed by Sheriffs of Albany County, and that in some cases the attendants were paid for thirty-six days within a space of twenty days. This was done, it was declared by assigning the attendants to more than one court in one day. In some cases attendants were paid for work in three or four courts at the rate of $3 a day in each court. This practice was objected to by examiners in the employ of Martin H. Glynn while he was State Controller, and since that time, it was said, the practice was discontinued. In two instances referred to to-day Under Sheriffs, employed at a salary of $1,500 a year each, were also employed as court officers at a per diem rate.

Mr. Osborne announced that he would examine Mr. Barnes when the committee reconvened next Tuesday.

The purpose and scope of the Senate investigation into the affairs of Albany City and County were outlined by Senator Bayne, Chairman of the Investigating Committee, during to-day's session.

"We are sitting here," said the Chairman to James W. Osborne, the committee's counsel, "to benefit and help the community, whose official organization we are now investigating with a view to correct any improprieties or defects or wrongs in the law as it stands. We have no interest in these matters except as members of the Legislature, with a view to discharging our duty to the community here.

"We have absolutely no concern, as a Senate committee, with the fact that vice exists in the City of Albany. But we are concerned with the fact whether there is any system of law established for this community which tends to protect and cultivate and nourish vice.

"This is not an attack upon the good people of Albany, as has been maliciously reported. We have the greatest respect for them; we make no reflection whatever upon them."

La Follette Uncertain About Campaign

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—Senator La Follette announced to-day that no plans have been completed for a campaign speaking tour in November, although he still hopes to be able to make several progressive speeches before Congress meets.

HINES MENTIONED AGAIN.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Oct. 20.—Wirt H. Cook, a lumberman of Duluth, as a witness to-day before the Senate Committee which is investigating the election of Senator Stephenson of Wisconsin, told, as others had before him, about the part played by Edward Hines, the lumberman and lobbyist, in electing Stephenson. In referring to a conversation in the Grand Pacific Hotel, Cook said that Henry Turrish asked Hines how he was getting along down in Washington.

"I am having a hard time," Hines replied, according to Cook. "For instance, there is Stephenson. After I elected him he went down to Washington and started to work for free lumber. I had a terrible time getting him lined up right."

Cook said that Daniel Haley of Duluth, another lumberman, told him that R. J. Shields, an agent for Hines, had had a quarrel with Hines because Shields wanted $15,000 for working for Stephenson and Hines refused to pay that much, saying Stephenson ought to pay half of it. Cook testified that shortly after hearing this he met Shields on a train between Chicago and Duluth and asked him about the story.

"We were talking about both the Stephenson and the Lorimer cases," said Cook. "I asked Shields how he came out with Hines in the dispute over the job at Madison. 'Oh, that's all fixed up,' said Shields. That's about all that was said."

Cook at the afternoon session testified that he had a talk with Shields at a hotel in Chicago subsequently to the talk with him on the train.

"Shields told me," said Cook, "that he did not blame me for going after Hines, but he did not think I ought to go after him. Shields said if I did anything to him he would shoot me. I tried to talk to him, but he was much excited and left the hotel."

Asked concerning a conversation he had with Lieut. Gov. Thomas Morris in the presence of Paul O. Husting, a State Senator, and Assistant Attorney General A. C. Titus, both of Wisconsin, Cook said:

"I did say that Edward Hines raised about $100,000 or $115,000 to put over the election. The statement was based on what I'd heard about Shields."

Shields, on the stand, denied absolutely all part in the Stephenson election as far as the legislative session was concerned, though he admitted doing work for Stephenson in his home county. He also denied threatening to shoot Cook, and said he never had trouble with Hines and never did any political work for him.

ROBBED WHILE OPERATING.

Shortly before midnight last night, Inspector Hayes and Sergeant Giblin of his staff were walking along Sixth Avenue at Forty-sixth Street, when they were approached by a man who wore a handsome overcoat and a new hat, but had grimy hands and a badly soiled face. The man asked for the price of a drink and a bed.

The inconsistency of the man's appearance excited the curiosity of the Inspector, and, calling Detectives Kenyon and McGhee, he had the man arrested and taken to the West Forty-seventh Street Station, where a charge of vagrancy was entered against him. When the man was searched the police say that the hat was found to be a new shape of English manufacture and the overcoat was also of English make. Under the overcoat the man wore a coat that indicated its owner to be a person of means. In the pocket of this coat the police say they found a card case containing the cards of Dr. Cary Eggleston, 171 West Ninety-fifth Street.

Dr. Eggleston was called up on the telephone and he came to the station and identified the hat and overcoat as the property of Dr. Henry C. Pelton, while the other coat he identified as his own. Dr. Eggleston told the police that in company with Dr. Pelton he was performing an operation at Bellevue Hospital yesterday, and before going into the operating room he and Dr. Pelton took off their coats and left them in an anteroom.

After completing the operation the doctors went to the ante-room and found that their clothes were missing. The prisoner when arraigned at the station said he was Richard Pears, 21 years old, an ironworker, and had been living at Mills Hotel No. 2. He said he came to New York recently from Wilmington, Del. He said the garments were given to him by another man whom he did not know. A charge of grand larceny was entered against Pears.

CULLOM MEMOIRS OUT.

Senator Makes Graphic Allusions to Roosevelt, Taft, and La Follette.

CHICAGO, Oct. 20.—The first copy of Senator Shelby M. Cullom's book of personal reminiscences appeared here today, and has aroused considerable interest because of the viewpoint from which it regards men and issues that have been a part of the political life in which he has engaged since his entry into public service fifty years ago.

Theodore Roosevelt is regarded by Senator Cullom in his book as the "Master Law Enforcer." President Taft is characterized as good material for a Supreme Court Justice, but as to his Presidential calibre Senator Cullom intimates that probably Mr. Taft has not enjoyed the position. La Follettelsm, as he terms insurgency, is described as the creation of a third party, and he can see no leader of the Republican Party in the Senate since Senator Aldrich's withdrawal.

FOR RESERVE PLAN CHANGE.

Profs. Laughman and Wildman See Danger in Committee's Power.

CHICAGO, Oct. 20.—Prof. J. Lawrence Laughlin of the University of Chicago, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the National Citizens' League, organized a year ago to promote sound banking laws, discussed the Aldrich central reserve system, when he appeared before the sub-committee of the National Monetary Commission holding public hearings in the West.

The committee concluded its Chicago hearings late to-day, after hearing John V. Farwell, President of the National Citizens' League.

"Business men are more interested in sound banking laws than in any other reform," said Mr. Laughlin. "In a panic the first man hit is the business man, whose loans are cut off when he most needs to borrow.

"The essential defect of our currency system is the rigidity of credit. We have an antiquated banking system, if what we have can be termed a system. The requirement for a lawful reserve limit in banks is perhaps the chief cause of the inelasticity of currency and more than anything else causes panics."

Prof. Laughlin raised the objection that too much power would be vested in the Executive Committee of nine members of the forty-five Directors. The Aldrich plan called for the vesting of the powers of the entire board in this Executive Committee.

"I think the Executive Committee should be subject to the orders of the board and not vested with full power to act," he said.

"This section has been misconstrued," said Congressman Vreeland, "and is worded faultily. It will be remedied to explain its exact meaning."

Murray S. Wildman, Professor of Economics at Northwestern University, followed Prof. Laughlin before the committee. He pointed a possible danger in powerful financial interests gaining control of the central reserve association and suggested a plan for limiting the individual voting power of each bank, or group of banks.

PETROLEUM MAY GO UP.

Delegates to National Association Want Stiffer Laws Against Discrimination.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Oct. 20.—Because the demand now meets the output the price of petroleum may soar in the near future, according to delegates to the ninth annual convention of the National Petroleum Association, which met here this afternoon. Fifty members, who, it is said, control one-fifth of the output, attended.

The convention favored legislation making it a penal offense for railway employes to give information to opposition firms, thus permitting the underbidding of the companies already holding the trade in that particular field, and advocated anti-discrimination laws to halt cutting of prices by firms entering a territory where another firm is already established. Personal liability of the refiner as to the quality of his output, with a heavy penalty when it is not up to the guarantee trade, and the elimination of the present "politically appointed Inspectors" were favored.

LAWYER KILLED BY GUIDE.

C. G. McRoberts, Formerly of Washington, Shot While Hunting.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 20.—Charles G. McRoberts, a prominent Chicago lawyer, recently appointed a Special Assistant District Attorney by United States District Attorney James H. Wilkerson, was shot and instantly killed by a guide this afternoon at Grass Lake, near Antioch, Ill., where he was duck hunting. Mr. McRoberts was in the bow of the boat, when, suddenly rounding a curve of the shore, they came upon a flock of ducks swimming on the surface.

"Duck!" shouted Cobb, the guide.

It is thought that McRoberts understood that Cobb cried "Ducks," and, becoming excited, he arose just as Cobb fired. The back of the lawyer's skull was shot off.

The body will be shipped to Washington, D. C. Mr. McRoberts was graduated from the Washington Law School at Washington, D. C., and was for several years attorney for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. He married Miss Virginia Goodwin of Union Springs, Ala., who was residing at the time in Washington. He came to Chicago six years ago. At the Aldermanic election of eighteen months ago he ran for Alderman of the Twenty-fifth Ward against Charles M. Thompson. He was a cousin of Attorney Josiah McRoberts, a prominent Chicago patent attorney, and had many friends in Washington, among whom were numbered Justices Brewer, Harlan, and Brown of the United States Supreme Court.

Robert Brundrett Dies on Train.

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Oct. 20.—Robert Brundrett of New York, while on his way from that city to Hot Springs, where he expected to spend the rest of the Autumn, was found dead in his compartment by his wife when the train reached Covington. Mr. and Mrs. Brundrett, with Miss Douglas, left New York last night, and when he retired Mr. Brundrett seemed in his usual health and spirits. Mrs. Brundrett discovered his death when she called him to dress an hour before the train reached Hot Springs. On its arrival here Dr. Edgar A. Pole was called, and said that Mr. Brundrett's death was probably caused by apoplexy. Mrs. Brundrett returned with the body to New York. Mr. Brundett was a brother of Hart B. Brundett, President of the Pacific Bank of New York.

85-CENT GAS NOW IN SOUTH BROOKLYN

NO CUT IN CONEY ISLAND

The Public Service Commission ordered yesterday the Kings County Lighting Company to reduce its rates for gas in the Thirtieth Ward, which includes the South Brooklyn, Bay Ridge, and Bath Beach districts, from $1 a thousand to 85 cents for the period from Nov. 1, 1911, to Dec. 31, 1912, and to 80 cents for 1913. This leaves dollar gas within the city only in the Thirty-first Ward of Brooklyn, in the neighborhood of Gravesend Bay and Coney Island; the Fifth Ward of Queens, consisting of the Rockaways; part of the Bronx, east of the Harlem River, and Staten Island.

In writing his opinoin on the complaint brought by John T. Mayhew and others against the Kings County Lighting Company, Commissioner Maltbie lays down two important principles with regard to the method of counting the value of the real estate property held by a lighting corporation in the capital on which it must earn a fair rate of interest. These have not been decided before by any State court, and are likely to lead to an appeal.

It has already been decided by the courts that the companies have the right to add to their capitalization the increment in the value of their real estate, although it has accrued through no act of the corporation, but merely through the growth of the community.

Commissioner Maltbie has now ruled that this increase in value as it occurs must also be reckoned as part of the earnings of the corporation and must be reckoned in considering the earnings out of which dividends are paid. He has also dealt with the investments that lighting corporations make in real estate in excess of their reasonable future requirements. He has permitted the Kings County Company to reckon in its capital such real property as it is holding now, in view of the probability of its requiring it for its plant in the future, but he has refused to count in the capital on which interest must be earned any holdings of real estate that may have been purchased for purely speculative purposes and which cannot be considered as essential to any reasonable future needs of the company.

The commission made its own valuation of the plant of the company. Commissioner Maltbie points out that in the reorganization of the present corporation in 1904 its capitalization was doubled overnight, and the books of the company give little help in arriving at a fair valuation. So the commission's own experts have valued the plant at not more than $2,500,000, as compared with a capitalization of more than $5,000,000.

During 1909 the company, on its own statement, earned 11 per cent., and in 1910 12 per cent. The commission considers that a fair rate of return for 1911 to 1913 would be 7½ per cent. on the true value of the property.

One peculiar contention of the Kings County Lighting Company was also disallowed. It was represented that if the company had laid its mains and pipes below unpaved streets and the city had afterward put down expensive paving, such as asphalt or granite blocks laid in concrete, it is entitled to earn dividends not on the cost of the actual laying of its mains, but on the cost of cutting through the expensive pavement and replacing it as well.

The commission rules that this would mean that every time a street was improved not only would taxes and assessments go up, but gas bills as well, and the same principle might be applied to the rates for electricity, telephones, and street railways. As the company's mains, according to its contention, have been increased in value in this way by from $250,000 to $300,000, if its method of reckoning were allowed the cost of gas should have been increased by 3 or 4 cents.

The next gas company the rates of which will come before the commission is the Bronx Gas and Electric Company, which operates in the eastern section of the Bronx. The East Bronx Property Owners' Association has complained that it charges more for making gas service connections than either the Northern Union or Central Union Gas Companies. The matter will come before Commissioner Maltbie on Oct. 31.

MUTE ON FEE ASTOR OFFERED

Newport Pastor Only Admits He Refused to Perform Wedding Ceremony.

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 20.—The statement made by the Rev. Martin D. Kneeland, D. D., of Boston, Moderator at the Presbyterian Synod held in Auburn, N. Y., on Thursday, that the Rev. Nathaniel J. Sproul, minister of the Presbyterian Church in Newport, R. I., had been offered $20,000 to perform the Astor wedding ceremony at Newport last month, is not quite in accordance with the fact, as explained by Mr. Sproul.

The latter minister, when asked to-day about the report, stated there was no amount named, and that no one had any right to make the subject public.

"I was approached by an agent of Col. Astor," he said, "and refused the offer, but further than that I have nothing to say."

CAN'T RECOVER FARO DEBT.

R. T. Warwick Gave $1,500 Check for Losses, Then Stopped Payment.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—After hearing testimony to determine whether faro is a gambling game or just a harmless amusement, the District Supreme Court yesterday refused judgment to J. A. Carrol, said to be a former faro bank operator of Augusta, Ga., who sued Randolph T. Warwick, a Washington business man, to recover on a "stopped" check for $1,500.

The check was given to cover losses on the Augusta lay-out. The court decided that faro was gambling.

"Honest John" Kelly of New York is said to hold Warwick's check for $2,500 given in the same game.

FUGITIVE BANKER CAUGHT.

Traced by Detectives Through Man Who Was on His Bond.

Detectives Bauerschmidt and Reilly of the Central Office who had been detailed to search for Emil Sameth, a Hungarian banker wanted in Perth Amboy, N. J., where he was indicted recently for embezzlement, and then jumped a bail bond of $25,000, arrested him yesterday at Thirtieth Street and Sixth Avenue. For several hours they had been unable to get any trace of the fugitive, and then they came to the conclusion that Adolph Greenbaum of Perth Amboy, who had supplied $5,000 of the bail, and came here ostensibly to aid in the search, was, in fact letting Sameth know of the movements of the police. They shadowed Greenbaum from Third Avenue and Twenty-fourth Street, and when he met Sameth in Sixth Avenue, were ready with a warrant. The prisoner was taken before Magistrate Murphy in the Jefferson Market Court and held without bail pending the arrival of requisition papers from New Jersey.

Sameth was indicted by the Grand Jury of Middlesex County, N. J., on several counts, charging him with operating a private bank without having obtained a certificate, and embezzling $15,000 of the depositors' money. The bank was known as a "foreign exchange," and his dealings were mostly with Hungarian employes of the mills at Perth Amboy, who wished to send money to Hungary. A few days after he was released on bail, Sameth disappeared, and Thursday it was learned that his trunk and some furniture had been sent to this city and taken to a house in West 141st Street.

Brooklyn Doctor to Pay Middletown Woman Physician This Sum.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Oct. 20.—In the Supreme Court in Orange County today a jury brought in a verdict of $1,200 against Dr. Herman Mendlowitz of Brooklyn, in favor of Dr. Lillian Morgans of this city.

Dr. Mendlowitz, when driving an automobile to New York, ran into a car driven by Dr. Morgans, smashing it and severely injuring Miss Morgans, who sued for $4,750.

Another suit pending before the court is one brought by W. F. Weigart of Tuxedo, against Fred. S. Proctor, the New York theatrical man. Weygart sues to recover $1,050, alleging that Proctor, while driving his automobile near Tuxedo, ran into his car and damaged it to that amount.

OUTPOSTS OF SUFFRAGISTS.

Convention Told That Alaskan, Hawaiian, and Cuban Women Want Votes.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Oct. 20.—Spreading out in all parts of the world, equal suffrage ideas have fastened their grip on the women of Alaska, Hawaii, and Cuba, declared Mary Ware Dennett, Corresponding Secretary of the National Woman Suffrage Association, which began its forty-third annual convention here to-day. Societies have been organized in those places, she said, and requests for help and information are being received constantly. A Japanese man is author of a book urging equal rights for men and women.

One of the notable women introduced to the convention by Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, the President, was Mrs. Ben Hardin Helm of Kentucky, sister of Mrs. Abraham Lincoln. Mrs. Helm declared she was heartily in favor of the movement.

ALLEGED OPIUM MEN HELD.

Three Raids Revealed $500 Worth of Drug, Revenue Agents Say.

Albert Shelley, who is known to the internal revenue authorities as "Boston Al," was arraigned yesterday before United States Commissioner Shields on the charge of manufacturing smoking opium without giving the required revenue bond. Later in the day Alfred Spinner, who is alleged to have been Shelley's salesman at 301 West 113th Street, was also arrested for violating the opium law.

The internal revenue men allege that Shelley ran three opium depots under the cover of cigar stores, at 12 Mott Street, 256 West Thirty-seventh Street, and 391 West 113th Street. All of them, Inspector Murphy says, have been raided in the last week, and opium to the value of $500 was discovered hidden in secret compartments.

Shelley was arrested yesterday at his home, 10 Stuyvesant Street, by Inspectors Murphy and Lewis. He was held in $2,500 bail, and Spinner in $500 for examination on Tuesday.

IRONWORKERS ASK PEACE.

Say Employers Ought to Forget a Quarrel Now Six Years Old.

For the first time in five or six years efforts are being made to bring about peace between the employers and the locals in this city of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, in one branch of which—the Housesmiths' and Bridgemen's Union—the open shop was declared by the organized employers about six years ago.

The housesmiths say that there is a demand for men now, and that the employers ought to be big enough to forget a quarrel with a union after six years. Through the local bureau of the State Board of Arbitration an informal conference took place yesterday between a committee representing the ornamental iron workers' or finishers' branch of the structural iron workers, whose union wants to have an agreement with the employers and representatives of the Employers' Association of Architectural Iron Manufacturers. Another conference will be held next week, t which Business Agent John Snyder said the Iron League, composed of the contractors who employ the housesmiths, will be invited to send representatives.

COFFEE MEN CALLING ATTENTION TO TRUST

EXPECT CONGRESS TO HELP

Some Dealers Suggest a Boycott in Favor of Tea—Department of Justice Can't Reach the Trade Combination.

Coffee roasters and dealers in conference yesterday at 91 Wall Street made plans for perfecting a large organization through which public attention may be called to the unusual coffee prices. The organization will give support to the plans of Representative Norris and the Department of Justice to have the coffee supply from Brazil thoroughly investigated.

A call was issued to all coffee dealers and roasters, asking them to attend a meeting to be held next Friday. It is proposed to launch the new organization on a small scale and then to expand it as rapidly as support can be gained for its purpose. It is expected that about thirty dealers will form the nucleus of the organization. Only one coffee man so far has announced himself in opposition.

Letters were read yesterday from Representative Norris of Nebraska stating that the people out his way were very much concerned over the present coffee market and the prospect that prices will continue to climb. Mr. Norris asked for suggestions from the coffee men as to ways and means that Congress may adopt to bring the price of coffee down.

A special report sent here from Washington was to the effect that the Department of Justice, in its investigation, has found that it could not do much, since the Coffee Trust, if one actually exists, is not a trust which the laws of the United States can reach, the Brazilian Government and the Brazilian State of Sao Paulo being interested, as well as private individuals and bankers.

The only American member of the Brazilian Government's Valorization Committee, Hermann Sielcken, of the firm of Crossman & Sielcken, has been absent at the Baden Baden baths for some time, and it is not thought possible that the Sherman law can be made to reach him. The coffee dealers present yesterday had heard from J. J. Schotten, who represents the firm of Crossman & Sielcken in St. Louis, and he had announced that there was no Coffee Trust, and no inside clique in control, and only the weather and crop conditions were to blame for the steady advance in coffee, which had gone up an eighth of a point at a time, through the three years in which the Valorization Committee have been arranging matters to their liking.

The letters of complaint sent in by dealers in the Middle West, and even west of the Rockies, were numerous. The complaints were mostly from wholesale grocers, who had formerly handled coffees at from 40 to 60 per cent. profit, and were never compelled to see their margins slip away, while they have hesitated to let the retail market feel the full force of the raise in raw coffees, since they have considered it a temporary fluctuation rather than the permanent raise it now appears to be.

Many of them, in explaining how they are making shift for themselves to satisfy their trade, which is in no mood to accept a big raise for their retail customers, wrote that they have been using inferior coffee for their brands which formerly were higher grade, and in addition have ceased to sell the grades at 20 cents, and most of the grades above that up to 25 cents.

Orson H. Hewlett, a large dealer in Salt Lake City, wrote that he favored an appeal to the people to boycott coffee until the Valorization Committee should lose their corner on the market. He declared that he was "pushing tea" instead of coffee throughout his own territory and was urging all other dealers to do the same.

One plan, suggested by a Western dealer, was to urge Congress not to tax Brazilian coffees as a retaliatory measure, but to tax all Brazilian products which could be bought elsewhere, thus cutting off Brazil from her best market for most of her products besides coffee. There would have to be a guarantee, most dealers hold, that any tax against Brazil's coffee would be continued over a term of years before it would operate to induce coffee raisers in other portions of the world to expand their plantations. If put into force at once, they declare, it would only operate to increase the cost of coffee by the amount charged to American households, since the Sao Paulo crop is the world's principal supply, and it is hopeless to figure on shutting it out and still supply the country's breakfast tables.

MOONSHINE SUPPLY CUT OFF.

And Three Men Patronized by East Side Are Sent to Prison.

Harris Corti, William Kleinburg, and Louis Levine of Passaic were found guilty yesterday after a three days' trial in the Criminal Branch of the United States Circuit Court of running an illicit distillery at Tappan, N. Y. An indictment on the same charge had been found against Benjamin Kaufman, but it was dismissed by Judge Hough.

According to the evidence for the Government, the distillery was established on Aug. 1, and a license had been taken out for it in the regular way. It was situated on the outskirts of Tappan, in a secluded spot, and the attention of the internal revenue officials was drawn to it by the fact that, though shipments of raisins and sugar were made to it in considerable quantities, no taxes for manufactured spirits were paid on it.

Special Agent Emmett Rudman and Special Gauger Green Miller were detailed on Aug. 25 to get information about it. They kept watch on the distillery day and night, and discovered that two or three times a week a horse and buggy were hitched up about midnight and two or three of the men made trips toward New York. It was suspected that they were taking demijohns of illicit spirits to the east side of New York for sale to the cheap saloons.

Rudman and Miller decided by Sept. 5 that they had sufficient evidence. They took up their position about midnight in some tall grass close by the distillery. After a long wait they saw the horse harnessed, and it came trotting down the road. Miller jumped for the horse's head, and Rudman, with his revolver, covered the three men in the cart.

"Halt in the name of the President of the United States," Rudman called.

Two of the men, who the Government agents said yesterday were Levine and Kaufman, jumped from the cart and ran. Rudman shouted that if they did not stop he would fire, and they gave themselves up. Meanwhile the third man, Corti, offered the agents $50 apiece if they would let them all go. In the cart were found a number of demijohns of raw spirits of 150 proof, which, with the entire outfit of the distillery, were seized.

Mrs. Corti, with her seven children, the youngest of them a few weeks old, fainted in court when Judge Hough sentenced her husband and Kleinburg and Levine to nine months on Blackwell's Island and a fine of $500 each.

Laura Biggar Contests Verdict.

Laura Biggar, the actress, asked Justice Garretson of the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, yesterday, to set aside a verdict of $75,000 recently obtained against her by Mrs. Agnes Mary Hendrick, the wife of a former Brooklyn physician. Mrs. Hendrick charged the actress with alienating the affections of her husband. She obtained a verdict for the largest amount ever given in Kings County in an alienation suit. As the case was tried before Justice Crane and a jury, the motion to open the judgment and to set aside the verdict was referred to him by Justice Garretson. Argument will be heard later.

STRIKERS WON'T ARBITRATE.

McCreary Says Only Issue Is Recognition of Federated System.

PADUCAH, Ky., Oct. 20.—Contending that at this time so far as the federation is concerned there is nothing to arbitrate, F. W. McCreary, President of the Federated Employes of the Illinois Central Railway, who are on strike, gave it as his opinion in a statement printed to-day that submission of the controversy between the road and the men would accomplish nothing.

"We are not striking for any set of rules," he insisted. "We are striking for the right to be heard. After we are heard and then no agreement can be reached, it will be time for arbitration. The contracts that we have submitted are not our ultimatum We are ready to make any changes that the railroad shows us cannot be granted."

Recognition of the federation proved the stumbling-block in the negotiations which preceded the order to the different crafts to strike.

Mr. McCreary's statement was in reply to assertions by local union officials at New Orleans that a proposal to submit the dispute to arbitration was under consideration. Mr. McCreary admitted the suggestion had been made to the officials of the federation.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 20.—Labor leaders here announced to-day that the five allied crafts of shopmen now on strike along the Harriman railroads are preparing to strike on the Rock Island system. A vote is being taken by the members of the various crafts in the federation, according to the announcement. The proposed strike would add between 5,000 and 10,000 men to the number already out.

"The trouble on the Rock Island system is not the same as the Harriman trouble," J. A. Franklin, President of the Boilermakers' Union, said to-day. "There is a question of wage increase involved in the Rock Island trouble."

CHICAGO, Oct. 20.—At the office of President H. U. Mudge, of the Rock Island system, it was stated to-day that the officials of the road had no intimation of an impending strike of shopmen.

SUPPRESSED EVIDENCE.

Servant Admits She Did So at Mrs. Stannard's Request.

ONTONAGON, Mich., Oct. 20.—Mr. and Mrs. Stannard had occasional quarrels, and the former was sometimes intoxicated and abusive, were statements made to-day by Dolly Hamenes, former domestic in the Stannard home at Mrs. Stannard's trial for the fatal poisoning of her husband.

"Did you lie to the Coroner at the inquest?" asked Attorney O'Brien.

"No, it was only that I did not tell him everything."

"What did Mrs. Stannard say to you before the inquest?"

"She told me to 'forget it' and not tell anybody."

"What did she mean?"

"She meant everything that happened the day Mr. Stannard died. I told her I would."

"Oh, Dolly!" cried Mrs. Stannard, loudly, when the girl testified that she herself had begun crying when she found Mr. Stannard sick and crying. The witness had said that she was still crying when she went downstairs to find Mrs. Stannard.

ALBANY, Oct. 20.—The steamer Penobscott of the Manhattan Navigation Company went aground last night a few miles below Albany while on her way to New York. The vessel was floated at an early hour this morning and resumed her trip undamaged.

FEW AT BUDGET HEARING.

Even Estimate Board Members Late and Mayor Complains.

The first of the public hearings on the budget for 1912 was held yesterday morning in the Council Chamber at the City Hall. All the members of the Estimate Board, except Mayor Gaynor and Borough President Steers of Brooklyn, were an hour and a half late.

"We are," replied President Steers.

"Well, we are three-quarters of an hour late already," replied the Mayor, "and I cannot wait for them to come from their homes. They were out late last night, I notice by the papers, abusing me, or some of them were. I guess they haven't got over it yet. They ought to be here. I can't wait any longer. I've got other things to do."

The Mayor then left, but came back when the other members arrived.

Dr. A. Korn, Chairman of the Budget Committee of the United Real Estate Owners' Association, said he wanted to protest against all increases in salaries. The Mayor told him that the question of salaries had been settled already, as the matter had been put over until next May. Dr. Korn also protested against certain increase in the Tenement House Department items. The Mayor said he would take up the matter with the Tenement House Commissioner later.

"There are only fourteen people here," commented the Mayor as he surveyed the room.

"That shows how little interest they take in the proceedings," said some one.

"No," said the Mayor, "it shows that they have confidence in us."

Thomas Fulton, an expert on water waste, asked that no cut be made in the expenses for preventing water waste. London, he said, uses 36 gallons of water a day per capita, while New York uses 120 gallons.

"Are you of the opinion that there is still a waste of 50 per cent. of the city's supply?" asked the Mayor.

"I am," replied Mr. Fulton. "Why, the Water Commissioner told me the other day that they had found a main running on Blackwell's Island from which there was a leak of 3,800,000 gallons daily."

The hearing was over in fifteen minutes. Another will be held next Friday.

BELL-AUBURN PHONE MERGER

Former Also Takes Over Concerns in Onondaga and Cayuga Counties.

AUBURN, N. Y., Oct. 20.—Announcement was made to-day by the Auburn Telephone Company that the local plant, together with the Skaneateles and allied telephone companies in Onondaga and Cayuga Counties, had been sold to the Bell interests, through the Friendship Telephone Company, a holding concern. These companies have hitherto been independent and were among the larger components of the system of the Federal Telephone Company, which recently fought the Bell interests successfully in Rochester. The statement says:

"The outstanding securities of the two companies involved are something over $400,000 and the payment to the holders is about $175,000."

The defection of the Auburn companies from the independent system probably marks the subsequent absolute control of the telephones of New York by the Bell interests.

"The Telephone Is My Active Business Ally"

A prominent New York business man has caused his friends to wonder at the ease with which he handles an immense volume of business. He spends the greater part of the day away from the office visiting his customers, yet he is always familiar with the progress of the work in the shop. In fact, all the details of the work appear to have his personal supervision.

This is the way he explains his ability to accomplish so much:

"Before leaving my home in the morning, I telephone to the office. My secretary reads the important mail to me over the telephone, and I lay out the work for the day. Then until the afternoon I visit my customers and the trade generally. I make it a practice, however, to telephone the office every half hour, in order to give personal attention to the execution of my customers' orders and to keep familiar with all the office details. This gives me a complete grasp of the whole business. In short, the telephone enables me to be Office Manager, Sales Manager and 'Star Salesman' as well. Without the liberal use of the telephone I could hold only one, not all three jobs. It pays to hold all three, and it pays to use the telephone."

All business men use the telephone more or less, and some of them are learning the extent of the telephone's helpfulness. The man who has learned this accomplishes so much that his business friends wonder at the time he is able to spend away from his desk.

It would be a good plan for you to make it your business today to take the telephone into full and active partnership, and see how much more you can accomplish with its help. Make the telephone an active ally in your work.

NEW YORK TELEPHONE COMPANY

PASTOR'S HOME OPEN TO MISS CLARA KING

Wife Would Welcome Young Woman Who Walked with Dr. Shaw.

TROUBLEMAKERS IN CHURCH

Two Deacons and a Trustee of Whom Things Could Be Told, Declares Minister Who Resigned.

"I don't care a snap of my fingers what folks may say. Clara King can find a home here with us whenever she wants it. I have perfect faith in my husband."

So spoke yesterday Mrs. E. B. Shaw, wife of the Rev. Dr. Shaw, who has resigned his pulpit in the Memorial Baptist Church of Brooklyn as a result of the controversy raised after his discovery in Prospect Park one evening last month with Miss King. Mr. Shaw explained that he was giving solace and advice to a member of his flock which every minister must provide. The time and place were explained; the first, as most convenient to him, and the second as the only available spot in the absence from home of his wife. Mr. Shaw's only concern was in defending Miss King.

The young woman came to her own defense yesterday with a counter-charge that the whole trouble was the work of narrow-minded members of the congregation, who had trumped up a malicious and outrageous tale. Its effect, she said, besides causing her pain and worry, had been practically to drive her from her boarding place at 297 Classon Avenue. She said yesterday morning, when she started for her work as stenographer in Manhattan, that she probably would not return to the house, but would find another boarding place. Late last night she had not returned, nor had she taken advantage of Mrs. Shaw's offer.

The wife of the minister is convinced of the truth of his explanation, and is as vigorous as he or Miss King in defending him from the charges which resulted in his resignation. Dr. Shaw had little to say about the affair on Thursday evening, but yesterday he was moved to declare:

"There is a nest of people in the church forever trying to make trouble. There are two Deacons and one Trustee in particular of whom I could tell you things that would create quite a flurry in the church. One Trustee was in trouble at Coney Island recently—trouble that wouldn't look well in print."

Miss King agreed with Dr. Shaw in his diagnosis of the cause of trouble, explaining:

"On one occasion, and only one, the Rev. Mr. Shaw, who always acted as a father to me and never otherwise, escorted me through Prospect Park to my home. We never sat on a bench in the park, nor did we linger on the way to my home. On the one occasion that he took me home we left his house, where I had been calling, at about 9:45 o'clock in the evening.

"The only thing we talked about was the subject of astronomy, of which he told me he had been making a study, with particular reference to his Biblical work. At that time I had been spending the evening at his home with his daughter.

"Mr. Shaw never at any time caressed or kissed me or held my hand or made any effort to do any of these things, and I am sure such an idea never entered his head. The whole story is malicious and outrageous, and it will be found to be the work of narrow-minded, mischief-making people in the church.

"For seven or eight years I had not been attending the church though I had continued my membership there. Mr. Shaw told me that the attendance was falling off and asked me to resume my attendance. I went to church because I thought I would help swell the congregation.

"When this outrageous story was first circulated I went to the deacons and told them my story. They were very kind and considerate to me and told me that they held me quite blameless. I think I have good cause for action against the ones who have started this story, and I shall consult an attorney about the matter."

There was a report yesterday that the Long Island Baptist Association had passed resolutions removing the Board of Deacons and Trustees of the Memorial Church for fomenting unnecessary scandals, inasmuch as nine ministers are said to have resigned from the church in nineteen years, six of them on account of stories about women in the congregation. The Rev. Dr. W. C. P. Rhoades of the Marcy Avenue Baptist Church, Moderator of the association, denied this last night.

The association met Thursday night in the Washington Avenue Baptist Church, but Dr. Rhoades said that the trouble in the Memorial Church was not mentioned, and no action was taken, since it was beyond the province of the association to remove deacons or Trustees, the right to take such action being vested solely in the congregation.

Meantime Dr. Shaw will not continue at the Memorial Church, though his salary will be paid until Jan. 1. He has not decided what he will do.

DRAMA AT THE BUDGET SHOW

To Give Young Girl's Playlet, "How to Keep Baby Well," To-day.

A tenement house drama, written by a 12-year-old girl, will be the feature of today at the Budget Exhibit, at 330 Broadway. The young authoress is one of the "little mothers," whom the Department of Health has recently been organizing into leagues and instructing in the proper care of babies.

The drama, which will be presented at 2 o'clock, is entitled "How to Keep Baby Well." It represents a tenement home, in which a baby is taken sick. The well-meaning out ignorant neighbors rush in and suggest various risky remedies. Then the distracted mother's niece, who is a member of one of the Board of Health's "Little Mothers' League," happens in. She makes one neighbor telephone to the Board of Health for a doctor, another neighbor go to the nearest Board of Health milk station for modified milk, and a third give the baby some castor oil.

Maurice E. Connolly, the new President of the Borough of Queens, was too busy to deliver his address at the Exhibit yesterday. But Coroner Israel Feinberg, at 4 o'clock, told a big audience about the machinery of the Coroner's office. According to the Coroner there were only 63 homicides in this city during the first six months of 1911, 37 shootings, 16 assaults, 7 infanticides, 3 malpractice cases, and no poisoning. During the same period there were 59 suicides by shooting, 10 by stabbing, 40 by poison, 3 by drowning, 95 by gas, 17 by hanging, and 1 by jumping in front of moving trains. There were fewer unidentifed dead in this city last year than in any of the four previous years; only 111, as compared with 147 in 1909, Coroner Feinberg said.

HILL'S HINT TO STEEL TRUST

Says It Can Give Up Its Minnesota Ore Properties if It Desires.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Oct. 20.—James J. Hill, Chairman of the Great Northern Railway, declared to-day that if the United States Steel Corporation wanted to cancel its lease of the Great Northern ore properties in Minnesota it was welcome to do so. On his return from Washington he was asked:

"Do you think the United States Steel Corporation can afford to give up the Great Northern properties after the big sums spent by it in developments?"

"If they can afford to do so, we certainly can," he replied. "I don't want to talk about it. If the Steel Corporation wants to cancel its lease, that's its privilege. The ore is there to make steel of.

"Outside of our properties, the Steel Corporation has not enough ore to run it for twenty-five years."

Finds His Dog Through The Times.

Dr. W. M. Tompkins of 158 East Thirty-seventh Street lost a pet black and white fox terrier on Saturday, Oct. 14. An advertisement in the Lost Column of THE TIMES resulted in the return of the dog the first day the advertisement appeared. The following note was received from Dr. Tompkins: "Dog was found at once through THE TIMES advertisement."

IS BAGGAGE PART OF CARGO?

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—Hearings were held at the Treasury Department to-day to determine the responsibility of shipowners for the baggage of passengers on their vessels. The question has been the occasion of correspondence for some time between Collector Loeb of New York and Secretary MacVeagh. To-day Mr. Russell appeared for the Government and attorneys presented briefs for the transatlantic companies before Charles E. Thompson, Solicitor for the Treasury.

The matter is regarded as very important by all shipowners whose vessels are engaged in the foreign trade. The companies under the law are held responsible for the valuation and declaration of their "cargoes," and in case of undervaluation or failure to declare are liable to heavy fines. But the companies have maintained that baggage is not technically a part of the cargo, and that as common carriers they are not to be blamed for the undervaluation of baggage in the personal charge of a passenger.

Passengers have always been made to declare their own belongings, and they still do so, but lately an effort has been made on the part of the Inspectors to hold the shipowners responsible. Such a ruling would greatly facilitate the collection of fines.

The Solicitor withheld decision, which will be finally made by him in the form of a report to the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. MacVeagh will then issue an order covering the matter.

The question at issue is important to Government officials and steamship men, for if baggage is cargo, the Inspectors and others working overtime on incoming liners docking at night will receive extra pay for their work, and the steamship companies will have to foot the bill.

Since the dredging of Ambrose Channel many steamships come to their piers and land their passengers at night. The present force of Collector Loeb is hard pressed to meet the extra work it is called upon to perform. There is not sufficient appropriation to employ a day and night force, and so the men have to work sometimes until the early morning hours examining passengers' baggage and then report for work later the same morning.

Under the existing laws Inspectors, weighers, and others employed after hours discharging cargo receive an extra day's pay if they work overtime and another day's pay if they are forced to work later than 11 P. M. If the contention of the Customs Inspectors' Association that passenger baggage is cargo is upheld then the law regarding the discharge of cargo will apply in baggage examinations at night and the men will be paid overtime by the steamship companies.

The transportation lines assert that the night docking of steamships is forced upon them by the demands of passengers, and they have resisted every attempt to have the law so construed that passengers' baggage will be regarded as cargo.

BYZANTINE LECTURER HERE.

Dr. Diehl, Authority on Ancient Art, Going to Harvard University.

Charles Diehl of the Institute of France, one of those who founded, last Spring, in Paris, the French Institute in the United States, arrived last night in the French liner Provence. Mr. Diehl is an authority on Byzantine art and civilization, and has come here as the first exchange professor under the arrangement made early in the year by Charles Bayet, Director of Higher Education in the Ministry of Public Instruction in Paris, and President Lowell of Harvard. Mr. Diehl will remain in this city for a few days before going to Harvard.

Charles Diehl was graduated at the French Superior Normal School, and in 1881 to him was awarded first prize in the annual competition in history in France. He was appointed to the French School in Rome, where he studied Byzantine art, and made explorations in the ruins in Southern Italy, and as a member of the French School of Athens directed archaeological expeditions. He returned to France in 1885 to become Lecturer of the Faculty of Letters at Nancy.

In 1891 Mr. Diehl was selected by the French Government to direct archaeological explorations in the North of Africa, and on his return in 1899 he was appointed Professor at the Faculty of Letters of the University of Paris. In 1907 a new chair was created for him at the Sorbonne, to which he was appointed as Professor of Byzantine History.

DETROIT WINS 3-CENT FARES.

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 20.—The City of Detroit to-day won a twenty-year fight for three-cent carfares. An agreement was signed this afternoon by officers of the Detroit Union Railway and by Mayor Thompson and P. J. M. Hally, Corporation Counsel, on behalf of the city, providing for eight tickets for 25 cents between the hours of 5 A. M. and 8 P. M. and six tickets for the same sum at other hours, universal transfers to prevail at all hours without extra charge.

The agreement will be submitted to the City Council next Tuesday night for ratification and to the electorate within sixty days. As it provides practically all that people have been contending for since the late Gov. Pingree first became Mayor, there is no doubt of its ratification.

The negotiations have been in progress for four months. The various suits which the city has brought against the company have had a bad effect on the company's stock and securities, and it is believed that these legal actions have been the principal influences which brought the company to terms. One of the suits was for a daily rental for the use of streets in which franchises had expired. Another was to compel the company to grant a through single fare to any point within the city limits, a suit decided against the company in the State Supreme Court and now in the United States Supreme Court.

By the agreement, all suits will be discontinued. The company will build at least ten miles of extensions each year, the city will pave between the tracks, and the company agrees to sell its system to the city upon six months' notice if the city desires to purchase. All present franchises are to expire in 1924, reducing the time of some franchises a dozen years.

Mayor Thompson and other city officials consider the agreement the best that any city which has been in controversy with its street railways has been able to negotiate. It is better than the Cleveland agreement because it provides for universal transfers.

TO ELECT EPISCOPAL BISHOPS

Four New Prelates to be Named Next Week—May Choose an Indian.

Meeting in special session here next week the Episcopal House of Bishops will elect four new prelates, three for foreign fields, and one for the Indians of South Dakota.

A year ago the Episcopal General Convention created a District of Wu Hu, in China, and elected as bishop the Rev. Dr. F. L. H. Pott. He declined his election, and now another selection is to be made.

Three years ago the Rev. Henry B. Bryan of Garden City Cathedral was sent to Panama under a commission of the House of Bishops. The commission was unusual, but Panama was regarded as important, and great progress was made by the former Brooklyn Archdeacon. It is now proposed by the English Church to transfer to American supervision its work in Central America and on the Isthmus, and the Episcopal bishops will create a district, with Panama as the see city, and elect a bishop.

The State of South Dakota has in it a number of counties wholly inhabited by Indians, of whom many are Episcopalians. Until now a white man has been bishop, but recently he was transferred to Missouri, and another is to be elected at this special meeting. The House is considering the creation of a district solely for Indian Episcopalians, and the election of an Indian clergyman as bishop. It has a number in priest's orders.

Last Spring the Bishop of Kyoto, the Rt. Rev. Dr. S. C. Partridge, formerly of Brooklyn, was elected Bishop of Kansas City and accepted. The fourth prelate will be chosen for the district.

Immediately following the session next week many of the bishops will go to Philadelphia to take part in the consecration of the Rev. Dr. Philip M. Rhinelander, and the Rev. Thomas J. Garland, as Bishop Coadjutor and Bishop Suffragan.

Boy Bitten by Dog Dies.

Charles M. Ryder, who was bitten by a dog two months ago, died yesterday at his home, 84 Guernsey Street, Brooklyn. The boy's wounds were cauterized immediately after he was bitten, and he showed no ill-effects until last Sunday, when he was taken ill. The boy developed convulsions on Wednesday.

TRAILED A BEGGAR BY CHALK MARKS

LED CHASE WITH POLICE

Beggar Had Refused to Buy Food with Money Given to Him After a Tale of Starvation.

A seedy-looking man entered the real estate office of John Hannan, Tax Assessor of Weehawken, in Fourth Street, Union Hill, N. J., yesterday and asked for work, saying he was a mechanical engineer.

"Nothing doing now," said Mr. Hannan in reply, "but drop in on Monday and I guess I can fix you up on some new buildings I'm erecting."

The man burst into tears.

"I'm sorry," he cried, "but I'll be dead by Monday. Why, man, I haven't eaten for two days. I'm starving."

Bannan quickly found a quarter in his pocket and handed it to the man. Then he turned to his clerk and ordered him to escort the man to a restaurant. With profuse thanks the man left with the clerk and Bannan turned about his business. The thought of the starving man would not leave him, however, and when the clerk returned presently he told him to hurry back to the restaurant and fetch the man.

"I'll give him something to do that'll tide him over till Monday," he said.

But when the clerk came back a moment later with the report that the man had left the restaurant immediately after him without buying the food of which he pretended to be so much in need, Mr. Bannan's pity turned to anger at the trick which had been played on him, and, handing several bits of chalk to the clerk, he instructed him:

"You see if you can get on the trail of this fellow. If you do, make arrows on the sidewalk to show me which way you have gone. Meantime I'll notify the police here and in West New York and North Bergen. Afterward we'll follow you."

Within four blocks the clerk came on his quarry, who was entering other stores with pleas for help, and he began to make his marks on the sidewalk.

Through Union Hill to West New York went the man, with the chalk-carrying clerk close behind. Then he retraced his steps, and, passing through Union Hill, went on to North Bergen. Far behind Mr. Hannan and Policeman Gilman of the Union Hill police were crossing and recrossing the clerk's chalk-marked path.

Arrows seemed to direct them in all directions, for pursued and pursuer had doubled frequently on their trail. At last, however, Mr. Hannan saw his clerk ahead, industriously making a mark on the sidewalk. A block beyond him was the man. Gilman overtook him in a few bounds and grabbed him. The man offered no resistance.

In the Union Hill Police Station he said he was Charles D. Brown of Kentucky. He refused to tell what town he came from or where he lived here. In his pockets the police found $1.63 in change and a gold watch worth probably $30. He was locked up for begging.

VOTE BUILDING TRADE STRIKE

To Call Out Men on 65 Buildings in Sympathy with Marble Workers.

The Building Trades Council, at a meeting in Labor Temple last night, voted to call a general strike next Tuesday out of sympathy for the strike of the marble workers. The strike will affect operations on sixty-five buildings in the city.

The Building Trades Council embraces 36 labor unions, which have a membership of 85,000. At the meeting it was voted to take out of buildings all union men where strike breakers are employed.

NEWS OF BOOKS

On the eve of bringing out a new book of short stories by Leonard Merrick, author of "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," Mitchell Kennerly, Mr. Merrick's publisher, has issued this statement to satisfy the many inquiries that have come to him, directly and indirectly, about Mr. Merrick's books—past, present, and to come:

"Leonard Merrick has been writing industriously and publishing rapidly for about twenty years. He has to his credit some dozen novels, three or four collections of short stories, and a play or so. He was first introduced to America some fifteen years ago in one of the monthly libraries that flourished at that time with his novel, "When Love Flies Out o' the Window," which has been out of print for several years. Four other novels, "Lynch's Daughter," "The Man Who was Good," "A Daughter of the Philistines,' and "One Man's View," have been printed in this country. The first of these has attained the distinction of being reprinted in a cheap edition while the last is still in print in its original form.

"When 'Conrad in Quest of His Youth' was published last Spring it was already quite seven years old as a printed book in England, and as a reprint in the Tauchnitz edition on the Continent. The immediate and gratifying response of the public and the critics to this late reprinting attested to the impression made by Mr. Merrick's work upon all people in this country who had read 'Conrad' in the Tauchnitz, for many people came into the stores and said that they had owned 'Conrad' in paper covers but had 'read it to pieces years ago' and wanted a copy between boards."

Arthur E. McFarlane is an author who has a strong fondness for boys. He has spent much time in camp with one of the biggest and most successful boys' clubs in Canada, and he promises some day that the escapades of this club shall figure in one of his books. In the meantime he has written a circus story for boys, "Redney McGaw" and his publishers are bringing out this Fall another boys' book, called "Great Bear Island," which in abbreviated form has already appeared in The Youth's Companion. "Great Bear Island" relates the adventures of four boys who spent a Summer camping in the Northern woods. Mr. McFarlane is a Canadian, who recently has come to New York to live.

George Bird Grinnell, the author of "Indians of To-day," of which a revised and popular edition has just been published, has returned from a Summer spent among the Indians. Mr. Grinnell lives with them as well as writing about them. As a result he has won their confidence to a quite unusual degree. Mr. Grinnell's work has been recognized as an authority on the subject for some time, but hitherto it has only been obtainable in an expensive form. Now he has taken advantage of its publication in a low-priced edition to revise thoroughly the text. All the original pictures have been retained in the new edition.

Charles E. Van Loan, who is one of the younger magazine writers, has joined the staff of Munsey's Magazine, and will henceforth write exclusively for that publication. Mr. Van Loan is a Californian, and represents in his personality and his work much of the breadth, color and strength of the West. He served a successful newspaper apprenticeship in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Denver, and New York before entering the magazine field.

Margaret Sangster, one of the first to read Zona Gale's new story, "Mothers to Men," has written to Miss Gale's publishers as follows:

"The somewhat enigmatic title, 'Mothers of Men,' chosen by Zona Gale for her latest book gives no hint of its peculiar charm and straightforward message. The story opens with a scene painted in colors so vivid that it cannot be quickly passed by, and from the very beginning it grips the heart. The child and the man forlornly struggling on in the darkness, before them the lights of happy homes, on which they have no claim, are typical of a great throng of outcast and sorrowful people who need the helping hand of those whom fortune has favored. The attitude of most of us who are comfortably clad, well fed, and safely housed toward those who are down and out is often indifferent, contemptuous, or cynical.

"Zona Gale in a story which is half a sermon shows convincingly that this attitude is wrong, and the whole beautiful story is a plea in behalf of the higher humanity and the fellowship of kindness, of which we see faint glimmerings on the horizon. She would have us deal with the problems of life not in the mass, but with the individual. The story is so fresh and captivating and so illuminated by clever bits of irony and witty comparisons that no one who begins to read it will lay it down until the final sentence is reached."

Very often a slight incident will start a train of thought in an author's mind which results in a long and complete story. For example, the idea of "Initials Only," Anna Katharine Green's latest detectives story, was suggested by the chance remark of a young lady that while she was in New York she happened to see a man washing his hands in a pile of snow on the street. The readers of "Initials Only" will remember that the first incident and the first clue of "Initials Only" is furnished by a man who in broad daylight washes his hands in a pile of snow on a side street, just off Broadway. Something in his manner arrests the attention of a bystander, and before long a mystery is discovered which is not disclosed until the end of the story.

Philip Verrill Mighels, whose tragic death while hunting in Nevada has cut short a most promising career, was probably best known for his book, "Bruvver Jim's Baby." He was a frequent contributor of verse to the magazines. Others of his writings are "The Ultimate Passion," "Chatwit, the Man Talk Bird"; "Dummy," "The Crystal Sceptre," and "Sunnyside Tad." Mr. Mighels was born in Carson City, Nev., forty-two years ago. He studied and practiced law in Nevada for awhile, but the desire to write was too strong for him, and he went into newspaper work in San Francisco in 1892 and later came to New York.

It was straitened financial circumstances that first turned Kathleen Norris's attention to writing. The second of a family of six children, who were largely dependent upon her earnings, for her father and mother were dead, it was necessary that she seek some profitable livelihood. She had often felt within her the impulse to write, but a curious lack of confidence in herself, coupled with an extreme shyness, seemed in these early years insurmountable obstacles to literary recognition. Her life, however, was full of interesting experiences, and her mental horizon ever broadening. For half a dozen years she was a bookkeeper, librarian, a settlement worker, and, finally, her natural bent asserting itself, a reporter. Her first position on a newspaper was that of society editor of The San Francisco Bulletin. Later she became a staff writer on The San Francisco Call and San Francisco Examiner. A few of her earliest stories appeared in The Argonaut. All this took place while she was Kathleen Thompson. In 1909 she married Charles G. Norris, the brother of Frank Norris, author of "The Pit" and "The Octopus," and, leaving her California home, came to New York City. Here her first story to be accepted took the prize in a short story contest, her recognition by the magazines following almost immediately.

The Boy Scouts of America are now said to number 300,000, and already there are discussions as to just how the movement began, reminding us of the endless questions about the origin of baseball. On the whole, the scout idea seems to be American in origin, although it is certain that Gen. Baden-Powell used boy scouts as messengers during the siege of Mafeking. According to Dan Beard, Baden-Powell himself declares that he "cribbed" the scout idea. A fair statement of the case is made by John L. Alexander, Secretary of the Boy Scouts of America, who in "Harper's Camping and Scouting," writes as follows: "Gen. Baden-Powell drew largely from all sources, and there is hardly a book written on boyhood that has not been forced to contribute something to the movement. He drew more fully upon the works of Ernest Thompson Seton, of the Woodcraft Indians, and Dan Beard, of the Boy Pioneers or Sons of Daniel Boone, so that, even if the movement was started in England, its principles and fundamentals were produced on American soil."

Edna Ferber, the author of "Dawn O'Hara," does not want to write—at least that's what she declared to a reporter lately. The reporter declares that Miss Ferber, though twenty-five, looks only eighteen; writes like a man, but is as pretty and feminine as the heroine in an English novel. "I hate to write," she says, "though if I don't I am perfectly miserable. I would much rather play tennis or go in swimming. The trouble is, I am too young yet, inside. I have to compel myself to go to my typewriter every morning, just as my working girl has to force herself to go downtown and take dictation. I never have any inspirations. I just grit my teeth and get down and grind. Every sentence I write is hard every word is labor. I haven't any dreams about my writing, either. All I want to do is just to get a little piece of real life and write it down."

Who is the greatest living woman? The editor of The St. Louis Mirror devoted some remarks to this question, and his readers, who have minds of their own, have tried to help him out. Judging by the letters from subscribers it is safe to assume that if the question were put to a vote Ellen Key would win. Her new book, entitled "Love and Ethics," a further exposition of her radical views on the relation of the sexes, is soon to be published. The general interest in her life and work is attested by the numerous magazine articles recently printed and the wide discussion of her earlier books.

Edna Turpin, author of "Honey Sweet," has won first prize for her cotton at the Southside Counties Fair. Whatever else Miss Turpin may be, she is a farmer, and takes an active part in the care of her stock and the raising of produce.

Isaac N. Stevens of Denver, author of "An American Suffragette," sailed yesterday from New York on a trip around the world. Mr. Stevens is an owner of newspapers both in Denver and Pueblo, and has been District Attorney for the State of Colorado. He was one of the foremost men in getting suffrage for the women in Colorado, and has just returned from San Francisco, where he stumped the State for the Suffrage Party.

F. E. Crichton, the author of "The Soundless Tide," a story of Irish life, is a woman, the daughter of the Right Hon. Thomas Sinclair, who has been for many years one of the leading men in Ulster. Mrs. Crichton always lived in Ireland until her marriage. She has twice visited America, and is an outdoor type of woman, fond of the country and of traveling.

The uniform edition of Fiona Macleod's works having been completed, Mrs. William Sharp is now in England busy with the editing of the forthcoming complete edition of the works which her husband signed as William Sharp. This edition will be uniform with the Fiona Macleod. The first volume, "Songs and Poems,' originally announced for this Fall, has been postponed until the Spring. With the works of Fiona Macleod and the life of William Sharp by his wife, which have been already published, this new edition will render easily available all the material concerning what is one of the most extraordinary cases of dual personality in the history of literature.

Helen L. Sumner, Ph. D., author of the book "Equal Suffrage in Colorado," in which she impartially gave the results of investigation undertaken for the Collegiate Equal Suffrage League of New York, is to be classed rather as a political economist than a suffragist. She has recently expressed herself as strongly in favor of industrial courts for the settlement of labor difficulties, having studied the workings of such courts in European countries. Her opinion is based on the actual workings of the institution in question, and her favorable verdict, like that which she pronounced upon Colorado suffrage, is the result of judicial summing up of the facts. She thus furnishes an example of a woman writer who is able to maintain the scientific attitude of mind, keeping free from the usual arguments about masculine and feminine superiority and not allowing her views on labor to be tinctured by her opinions of suffrage.

FIVE years before his death Mark Twain selected ALBERT BIGELOW PAINE to be his authorized biographer. Since that time Mr. Paine has been steadily engaged on this great work. He lived in constant touch with Mr. Clemens, and in his hands were placed the accumulated letters, notes, and memoranda of a lifetime. Perhaps no biographer has ever been offered so rich an opportunity. Mr. Paine has visited every place where the great humorist ever lived, he has gone over the scenes of all his travels. He has searched out all who knew Mark Twain in every part of the world and has gathered from them every anecdote—every letter which throws the least light on any portion of this romantic and fascinatingly interesting life.

RECKLESS DRIVING IN GLIDDEN TOUR

MAXWELLS LEAD FOR TROPHY

Special to The New York Times.

ANDERSON, S. C., Oct. 20.—This was good roads day on the Glidden tour, which terminated its seventh day of progress here to-night. North Carolina has been dubbed the Good Roads State by the tourists, but by the looks of the roads so far in South Carolina this State will have to be included in Class A. The run of 160 miles from Charlotte to-day was over the finest dirt and macadam roadbed possible to find. For this reason probably more than anything else the run was practically uneventful, aside from a ditching or two, caused by reckless driving, and the usual ceremonious hospitality displayed by the inhabitants in the towns along the route.

The spills occurred ten miles north of Anderson on as fine a piece of road as ever was built. Two young chaps from Atlanta who were coming North to meet some friends in the tour began to beat it, with the usual result, except that none of the occupants of the cars was hurt, and the only damage to the cars was a little scraping off of paint, though both machines overturned.

The remarkable feature of the tour so far is the fact that so few cars of the sixty-four which started from New York last Saturday have been eliminated from the score. One of these cars was among the very smallest in the $600 class, but the rough roads in Virginia were too much for it, and it had to retire with a broken axle and several other misfortunes. An even smaller car, one with three wheels, is still in the run, but is not a contestant.

The run has been short of Governors the last two days. Gov. Hoke Smith of Georgia was forced to leave the tour on account of some official business, but the Atlanta crowd, which is really the most enthusiastic in the tour, say the Governor has gone on to Atlanta to see that nothing is left undone for the comfort of the tourists during their lay-over in this city, which will be the control to-morrow night, and will continue to be so until Tuesday morning.

Some of the smaller towns of the night controls have been lacking in hotel accommodations, but this place is the worst on the list. In many cases six men have been allotted to one room, which is provided with an old-fashioned wash bowl and pitcher, a condition particularly hard to-night, for to-day's run was the dirtiest of the tour. While the roads have been wonderfully well constructed, they were very dusty.

Five additional penalizations were scored against the records of the Glidden tour cars as the result of to-day's run. The White (gas) car, No. 7, entered by Major John S. Cohen of Atlanta as a member of The Atlanta Journal team, was nine minutes late at the noon control at Spartanburg. The foundation for this penalty was laid in the wild night ride into Winston-Salem, when the car experienced a rough trip. A weak front spring yielded, and the resultant delay brought a penalty of 18 points before Charlotte was reached. Major Cohen decided to take his penalty this morning and repair tthe injury thoroughly. This was done, and the car reached Spartanburg nine minutes late.

Oldsmobile 60, the Cordele (Georgia) Chamber of Commerce entry, suffered tire trouble in the morning and was obliged to make so many changes that it was 39 minutes late in reaching Spartanburg.

Case car 71 was penalized 8 points for lateness at Spartanburg as the result of tire trouble.

In addition to these known penalizations, the two remaining contestants in the Metz factory team, Nos. 15 and 16, failed to reach the night control here up to the time of the closing of the checking station.

There are still eighteen cars as individuals in the contesting column without a demerit against them, having run almost two-thirds of the total distance without lateness at any of the controls. These cars include: Maxwell 1, 2, and 3, running as the Tarrytown, N. Y., team. This team is the only one left without a demerit, and consequently is in the lead for the Glidden Trophy. The cars are in excellent condition except for a slight radiator leak in No. 2 and a little looseness of one of the connecting rods in No. 3. Maxwell No. 4, Gov. Hoke Smith's entry, is also perfect, but it is teamed with Columbia 49 and Maxwell 50, and consequently has no chance for the cup, because No. 50 is out of the running, due to trouble experienced with its ignition system almost from the start. American 5, Inman Gray's entry, of Atlanta has a clean score, but is beyond any chance of the Glidden Trophy, because its teammates, Thomas 6 and White 7, have been demerited, and the Thomas has been disqualified for violation of the rule against being towed into a control station. Stevens-Duryea 11, entered by C. M. Johnson, Atlanta, is clean, as is its teammate, the Stevens-Duryea 39. The other Stevens car in this team, No. 66, has a penalty of 19 points, and the team is second on the list in competition for the main prize. Mitchell 19, entered by L. C. Brown of Athens, Ga., is also on the roll of honor with the Thomas 22, Cadillacs 32, 40, and 48; Ford 44 and 45, Flanders 54, Oldsmobile 65, and Mitchell 73.

The cars withdrawn from the contesting column so far number eight and are as follows: Thomas, 6, which broke a driving chain within a mile of the control at Roanoke; Marmon, 12, which went out with a bent axle at Roanoke; White, 14, broken springs; Schacht, 20, broken crankcase; Holliday, 36, damaged axle in collision at Lancaster, Penn., and later encountered difficulties in the Virginia hills; Metz, 15, which withdrew after the terrific night drive into Winston-Salem, which brought penalties to its teammates.

The little cars were perfect until the long pull through the hills put them out. E. M. F., 42, from Indianapolis, made only one control from the time the cars left Philadelphia. Two broken axles and two broken springs caused its withdrawal. The reason for the troubles of this car lies in the single fact that the car was equipped with a new variety of solid tires that proved conclusively not to be of service in this kind of a tour. Not a bit of motor trouble or anything else that was not directly chargeable to the lack of resilience in the tires was experienced by the E. M. F., 42. The other withdrawal was Maxwell, 50, a car of the Mercury model fitted with high tension ignition, which was not perfectly familiar to the driver.

The day's score sheet posted to-night by Referee Walker follows:

Capture Point Honors in Athletic Games with Freshmen.

The inter-class dual athletic meet between the freshman and sophomore classes of the De Witt Clinton High School, held yesterday afternoon in the high school gymnasium, resulted in a victory for the latter class by the total score of 43½ points to 31½. The freshman class had the pick of over 200 entries yesterday, while the sophomores had only 100 entries to select from, but the class of 1914 had the better all-around athletes, and mostly all of them had the experience gained by contesting in former track events of this kind. FRENCH CHAMPION LIGHTWEIGHT WEAK

Louis De Pontheiu Skillful, but Shows No Hitting Power Against Battling Mantell.

Louis De Pontheiu, champion lightweight of France, made his first appearance before the American boxing public last night in the star bout of the New Polo Athletic Association with a second-rate opponent, Battling Mantell. Although the Frenchman was victorious, he did not display the class of the American title holder of his division.

The visitor showed plenty of skill, but his punches lacked the necessary sting that goes to make up a champion, and he was unable to damage Mantell to any degree. Mantell, although being the first to be sent against the French title holder, did not appear at all backward, and waded in at all times for the body, where he landed some telling blows. At long-range work De Pontheiu excelled from all angles, and landed almost at will with left jabs and short right hooks, but he lacked the strength to dispose of Mantell.

The Frenchman was entitled to the honors in six of the ten rounds, but the margin on each occasion was so slight that he was only entitled to the honors by outpointing his opponent. Mantell occasionally got over a stinging blow which showed its effect on the Frenchman, and his work was particularly noticeable in the fifth session. He started out to force matters, and was all over De Pontheiu, and shot over a hard right to the face and crossed his left to the stomach. The Frenchman covered up to avoid the attack, and after ducking low in a clinch ran into a terrific right swing that landed flush on his jaw and had him in a bad way.

The last half of the contest continued with De Pontheiu doing all the forcing and landing plenty of straight left jabs to the face, but none of them ever bothered the local boy, and he only forged in all the harder in an effort to get over a deciding blow.

Mantell showed a flash in the eighth, the same as he did in the fifth session. By scoring a clean right swing to the jaw forced the Frenchman to slow up again and work on the defensive. In the last two rounds both boys fought hard all the way, with Mantell doing the better work in the clinches, while the Frenchman played for long range blows, where he worked his left jab easily. De Pontheiu had much the better of the closing round, and was all over Mantell, but never had him in any serious danger.

The Frenchman may probably show to better advantage after having fought several of the American boxers, but if he is pitted against any of the first-class lightweights he will have to show much better style or be on the defensive end.

Mike Carroll, formerly of the Glencoe A. C., will soon graduate from the semi-final division of performers if he continues his present style, as he easily outclassed a husky opponent in Chap White after six hard rounds.

Queal in Morris A. A. Run.

The Morris A. A. will hold its second weekly cross-country run of the season from the clubhouse, 162d Street and Jerome Avenue at 3 o'clock to-morrow afternoon. The greatest of distance runners, William Queal, will go after the course record, which he himself established last Sunday. His time then was 21 minutes 41 1-5 seconds, which, though far faster than the best previous record, does not do him justice, as he ran in complete ignorance of the course. His effort this Sunday will be watched with great interest. All runners are invited to take part in the run, which leads over a course ideal for the sport.

BOXING SHOWS TO-NIGHT.

Three ten-round bouts are scheduled for to-night at the Fairmount A. C. In the main event Kid Herman and the Kahoma Kid will be the headliners, and the other events will bring together Artie Edwards vs. Banty Lewis and Young Lampe vs. Eddie McDonald. Jim Kendrick, the English bantam, and Packey Hommey of this city will come together to-night in the star bout of ten rounds at the Sharkey A. C. Both are clever bantam weights who are not far below the championship class. Young Ketchell and Richy Ryan will do the honors in the semi-final.

Joe West, the west side boxer, and George Bush of Boston will figure in the star bout of to-night's show at the Long Acre A. C. A six-round semi-final and a number of shorter bouts will precede.

PLAINFIELD DOG SHOW.

The third annual show of the Plainfield Kennel Club will be held to-day at the Horse Show Grounds, Plainfield, N. J. The 1911 show surpasses not only the two that have been held before by the same club, but in total dogs and total entries it has been excelled by only one show of the 1911 outdoor season. The entry list includes the name of practically every person of social or plain kennel standing in the dog world.

Harvard Freshmen's Athletic Games.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 20.—The Harvard Freshmen Athletes held their fall games in the Stadium this afternoon. The track was very slow and there were no performances made that were at all brilliant. In the 100-yard dash Tower was first man in 10 3-5 seconds, and in the 120-yard low hurdles Tapping finished in 15 1-5 seconds, which was very good. The two-mile run was taken by Stone in 10 minutes 57 3-5 seconds, while Carter won the half-mile run in 2 minutes 6 4-5 seconds. In the field events the performances all were far below standard.

HOT SPRINGS' COUNTRY FAIR.

Special to The New York Times.

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Oct. 20.—Interest at Hot Springs centred to-day in the old-fashioned country fair, which visitors here gave at the Casino and on the Homestead grounds, in aid of Archdeacon Frederick W. Neaves's mission work among the Blue Ridge mountains and St. Luke's Episcopal Church here. The Casino lawn was turned into a country fair grounds by the erection of booths and side shows. Sheafs of corn and enormous pumpkins were used for decorations about the Casino veranda and the information bureau, where W. C. Witherbee reaped a harvest of dimes.

Mrs. Harry Darlington exhibited the Virginia goose, which proved to be visible only in a mirror; the Misses Gladys Hinckley and Catherin Fay read the future in palms and cards, Miss Virginia Hargraves Wood sketched silhouettes, and J. Dunbar Wright made himself useful barking the attractions of the fish pond and the vaudeville shows.

Mrs. Gustave F. Touchard conducted trips around the world, and Charles Inman rented tennis balls for three throws to hit a darky on the nose. A number of children, among whom were Eleanor Bright, Sarah and Lemoyne Dunlop, and William and Thomas Laughlin, took part in the sporting events, which included potato and egg races.

There were two vaudeville programmes during the afternoon, and music was furnished by the Homestead sextet from the Japanese room.

The Misses Olga and Mary Wiborg, who are guests of Miss Gladys Ingalls at Ingallscote, opened the vaudeville performance with songs to banjo accompaniments, and Jules Glaenzer did some imitations and sleight of hand tricks. A pantomime sketch to a song sung by Mrs. W. C. Denny was enacted by Miss Emily Delafield, Miss Helen Leroy Miller, J. W. Harle, and Mr. Bateman.

Miss Mary Carlisle played for some fancy dances by Miss Eleanor Bright, and J. Dunbar Wright sang a group of French songs.

Home-made sandwiches and cake were contributed by the cottagers and served with tea by young girls in breakfast caps, 'kerchiefs, and aprons. Among the waitresses were the Misses Dorothy Hancock, Gladys Ingalls, Abbie Barnard, Olga and Mary Wiborg, Katherine Force, Emily and Charlotte Delafield, Nila C. and E. Mercer French, Rosamund Burr, Claire Bird, Helen Whitney, Katherine Fay, L. Witherbee, and Frances Burr.

Mrs. Craig Biddle and George Drexel Biddle drove to Fassifern Farm this morning for luncheon and did not return till near night, and others lunching there were Mr. and Mrs. George H. Lorimer, R. J. Allyn, Mrs. George D. Webb, and Mrs. G. H. Bentley. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Ayers motored to the Farm to-night for dinner, taking some friends with them.

MADE IN NEW YORK CITY
38 Horse Power Shaft Drive

Talk No. 3

In the 38 H. P. Shaft Drive, as in our other models, Krupp steel is used for important parts. The same front axle, springs, drop forgings, shafts and gears are employed as in the 50 and 90 H. P. chassis. We have never found a steel that will give the same service.

This steel costs us 57 cents a pound for some of the drop forgings as against 15 cents for the domestic kind; the cost of machining is also increased by its extreme toughness, but it pays in the long run, as we never have to replace these parts. A Simplex Car will show little wear after years of use—that tells how they are made.

MOON

J. W. Moon

That's why I can build a high-priced car at medium price. Most anybody can assemble a car, getting an axle here, an engine there and a transmission somewhere else.

But you don't get a T-head motor in an assembled car. The Moon Motor is T-head, 4½x5 inches—the kind made famous by the Packard, Pierce, Locomobile and other high-priced cars.

The Moon Motor is a long-stroke motor. Nobody who is up to date uses anything but a long-stroke motor.

I want you to come and see my three-bearing crankshaft—fan in flywheel—big four-bolt connecting rods; my staunch frame which is made over special Moon dies and has the greatest factor of safety of any frame in a medium-priced car. I want you to see the big Moon wheels, with big spokes. The spokes in Moon wheels are 1¼ inches thick. Most others are 1⅛.

Note that the Moon radiator is genuine Honeycomb—not a false front. It's a big, luxurious car—the kind that usually costs at least $1,000 more.

But it often happens this way—

You return an unsatisfactory purchase, and get a credit slip which necessitates a further purchase in that store—they hang on to the cash.

Not so with us!

CHANCE OF A GAME TO-DAY IS SLIGHT

PLAYERS TALK OF PROTEST

Ordered to Pose for Moving Pictures, They Want to Know Who Gets the Money—Giants Get Practice.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Oct. 20.—The chances for the playing of the fourth game of the world's championship series between the Giants and Athletics at Shibe Park to-morrow look very slim to-night. After a fine, misty rain all afternoon and evening, the storm broke into a hard downpour about 11 o'clock. The Weather Bureau looks for cloudy and unsettled conditions for at least twenty-four hours. There has also been a slight drop in the temperature, and more disagreeable conditions could hardly be imagined. The diamond at Shibe Park is covered with pools of water, only the pitcher's box and batter's box being protected by canvas covering. It looks as if the game would have to go over until Monday. In case of a postponement to-morrow the Giants will go to New York and return here on Sunday night.

The members of the National Commission came to the city to-day, and held a short meeting at the Bellevue-Stratford. They are as much peeved at the continual bad weather as anybody, and after listening to the reports of the umpires, who went to Shibe Park this morning and got splashed with rain and mud looking over the diamond, they gave orders that the game be played to-morrow if such a thing was possible.

Umpire Klem said that the field was so bad that he didn't believe that a whole day of bright sunshine would dry out the water-soaked turf. Somebody suggested to Manager Connie Mack that the field be saturated with oil and then set on fire. The Athletic leader shut down on this plan quickly, and said he wouldn't have the fine green grass of the park spoiled in that way just to avoid another day's postponement.

At one time this afternoon, just before the National Commission started back for New York, there was some talk that it would be advisable not to try to play on the muddy field Saturday, even if the weather was fair. Philadelphia fans, however, wouldn't approve of this course, for they are keen for a game as soon as possible, and want to see the series over with.

Secretary Gray of the New York Club suggested to-day that the fourth game be transferred to New York, because the Polo Grounds diamond dries out quickly. This suggestion is entirely out of the question, for, in the first place, the rules regulating the series forbid it, and, in the second place, the Athletic fans would rise up in indignant insurgency.

Never before has it been necessary to put off a world series game three days in succession, and it is generally believed that next season an effort will be made to start the games earlier and have the important event over about the time the league season ended this year.

Giants Out for Practice.

Manager McGraw sprung a surprise this afternoon when he broke up pool games, billiard matches, and card games among the Giant players at the Majestic with the order for every man to jump into his uniform as quickly as possible and go out to the National League Park for practice. The players were dumbfounded, but they followed instructions quickly, and shortly after 2 o'clock were chasing around in the wet grass in a fast warm-up. They kept out of the muddy base paths.

All the pitchers limbered up their arms, and the infielders and outfielders did a little easy work. Then they all took a run around the lot and a shower bath.

The players displayed much ginger in the warm-up and were glad to break the monotony of the long sojourn around the hotel. The players are all in fine condition, and the pitching staff is probably in better shape than any time since the series began. The team is still brimfull of confidence in spite of the fact that the Athletics lead them by a game.

Manager Mack sees some good in the postponements, for it gives his pitchers a rest, and also has given Frank Baker's spike wounds a chance to heal. Bender will pitch the next game for the Athletics and Manager McGraw's selection is likely to be Marquard. Rube himself is more than anxious to go back at the champions, and both he and Matty think they have learned just what Baker can and cannot hit.

Dispute Over Picture Privileges.

No rainy day here is complete without some little sensation touching on baseball. The third postponement of the fourth game was no sooner announced this morning than it became known that the players of both ball teams had risen in wrath against an order from the National Commission to pose for a moving-picture concern at any time when the snap-shot man was ready for them. Not that the players are modest, but if these moving pictures are to be taken and shown to fans from Maine to Texas during the Winter league season, somebody's going to make a lot of money out of it. Well, who? That's what the ball players want to know. If the royalties from the films are going to flow into the coffers of the National Commission, the ball players rise to remark that they wouldn't mind a bit if some of the profits came to them. And again if the National Commission granted this big concession to the moving-picture people out of the goodness of their hearts, the ball players think that it's about time to appoint a committee for the National Commission.

The Giants are "up in the air" about the picture problem. Some of them say they will flatly refuse to pose unless they are allowed to share in the profits of the transaction. Baseball with them is a business, they say, and they don't propose to furnish pictorial entertainment for the whole country just for the love of having their pictures taken.

It is said that the Chicago firm which took the pictures of the World's Series last year cleared up $100,000.

There was a suggestion to-day that a committee of Giants be appointed to confer with the Athletics on the moving-picture matter, and find out if there isn't some way of arranging for a contribution for allowing themselves to be made art subjects for the jumping photos. Mathewson will probably be appointed to represent the Giants.

Fred Snodgrass got back from New York to-day and laughed at the story about his being shot yesterday. He said he heard it while on his way to see his mother in New York before she started back to her home on the coast. He was afraid she would hear the yarn and believe it, so he hurried to turn up in her presence alive. Snodgrass was shot a dozen times to-day by photographers, and next to Baker, "Snoddy" is the most-talked-of person in Philadelphia. Comment on him, of course, runs along a different channel than the noise they are making about "Home Run" Baker.

On top of Manager McGraw's many reasons for indignation he has another now, and that's about fining Fred Merkle $100. The New York Manager says it's an outrage, and that Merkle only mildly kicked on a decision which he considered unjust. Merkle takes the punishment philosophically, but he knows a lot of ways he could make good use of that $100 nevertheless.

Baseball Banquet Postponed.

The committee in charge of the banquet which was to be tendered to the Giants, winners of the National League pennant, at the Hotel Imperial to-night, announced last night that the affair had been postponed until next Saturday night. The postponement of the World's series games because of the inclement weather was the cause of the change of date.

PRINCETON STARTS SOUTH.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 20.—Princeton's 'Varsity eleven ran through signals for a half-hour this afternoon, prior to their departure for Annapolis, in a drizzling rain which fell on the thoroughly soaked gridiron at Osborne Field. The undergraduates marched to the station in a body, and cheered the team as the train pulled away from Tigertown. There was lots of spirit in evidence, for the Tiger following is considerably concerned about the probable outcome of to-morrow's battle with the Middies. Every one is heartily glad that the game will not be pulled off on the soggy gridiron here, while many express a fear of the heavy Navy line on any field.

Twenty-one men were taken on the squad that left this afternoon, and to-morrow morning eight more "subs" will leave on a special train which has been engaged to carry 250 undergraduates to Annapolis.

It is not believed, however, that the play will warrant many substitutions, and Coach Roper looks to his first string men to work longer to-morrow than in any previous game this season. The first squad will spend to-night in Baltimore, going to Annapolis at an early hour to-morrow.

Capt. Hart will not start at left tackle to-morrow, but it is believed that he will be in that position before the end of the contest. McLean continues in this position, and "Dutch" Brown is in good shape after yesterday's rest, and gets the call over McCormick at right guard. For the first time this season Goldie Wight will be on the bench when the whistle blows to-morrow. Pete Vaughn has the call over him, but Wight will undoubtedly get a chance in the line-up. "Hobey" Baker, who has been making good in the back field, will line up against the Navy at left half back.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 20.—The Naval Academy will have its full strength against Princeton to-morrow for the early portion of the game at least. This afternoon the signal work was snappy and accurate, and confidence was infused into the men. Capt. Dalton and Brown, the giant of the team, both of whom have been out of the practice during most of the week, worked during the afternoon and appeared to be in good shape. However, any of the regulars who show signs of physical unfitness will be taken from the game at once, even though it puts the Navy team in a hole.

The local crowd was much interested in the announcement that Capt. Hart would be back in the game for Princeton. It is expressed that it was due to Hart's individual work that they lost to Princeton three years ago, the last contest between the two teams. The team with which the Navy will start the game to-morrow will average about 181 pounds, probably the heaviest that the Academy has ever had in a big game.

KEAYS IN HARVARD LINE.

Capt. Fisher Will Take No Chances with His Lame Knee Against Amherst.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 20.—Harvard's work in the Stadium this afternoon was entirely on plays and to get the rush line working faster, Capt. Fisher having decided to take no chances with his lame knee against Amherst to-morrow. Keays was put into the line at right guard, and he with Storer and Leslie will comprise the centre. Kersburg, the new assistant line coach, has found Keays a candidate to his liking, and has been coaching him for three days. This means that Keays again gets into the running for a place on the 'Varsity, and that by the Princeton game he may be put back on the left wing of the line, taking his former place from Leslie.

Capt. Fisher could play to-morrow, but the Amherst game is expected not to be hard, and it is believed that a substitute on the line will not matter. Smith will be at left end on defense, anyway, so that when Amherst has the ball Gardiner will have to work with two newcomers, Keays and Felton, the latter now being at right end.

Harvard's backfield for the big games has been practically decided this week. There is Potter, of course, and Wendell, but Reynolds and Blackall have been doing such good all-around work that they will start the game to-morrow.

Against Amherst it is planned by the Harvard coaches to use few substitutes and to make the regulars go practically the entire distance. To-morrow's line-up will be:

In the practice to-day there was a lot of kicking and practice for the backs in handling a slippery ball. The field will not be dry for the game to-morrow; but, nevertheless, it has been planned to play a more open passing and kicking game than against Williams, in which contest Harvard rushed the ball all the time and made three touchdowns on three advances of more than fifty yards each.

Dickinson to Play Haverford.

Special to The New York Times.

CARLISLE, Penn., Oct. 20.—In preparation for the game at Haverford to-morrow, Coach Pauxtis of the Dickinson football aggregation worked his men hard this afternoon. As Dickinson's style of play is mostly open, a greater part of the afternoon was devoted to familiarizing the players with running on a wet field. The red and white eleven put through its signals with a dash that promises much for dry weather. Trainer McAndrews reports every one, except Jacobs, in good physical condition. Centre Felton will be supplanted, as he has not yet returned from home. The squad leaves Carlisle early to-morrow morning. Dickinson's line-up will be: Left end, Rodgers; left tackle, Caplin Bashore; left guard, Gooding; centre, Hertzeler; right guard, Brown; right tackle, McGregor; right end, Shearer; quarter back, Goldstein; left half back, Dunn; right half back, Pearlman; full back, Schafer.

Trinity School Wins at Football.

The Trinity School football team proved its superiority over the Hamilton Institute eleven in a one-sided game on Columbia Oval yesterday afternoon, winning by the score of 15 points to 0. This was the initial game of the football season for both teams, and although the Hamilton Institute team is reputed to be a fast eleven, it displayed nothing remarkable in the contest yesterday, while with the Trinity School team it was just the reverse, the coaching of Coach Kilheffer being seen in every movement the team made. At no time did the Hamilton Institute eleven threaten to become dangerous, while the Trinity team started in to score in the first minute of play, and at the end of the first period it had piled up a lead of eight points over its opponents, the score being 8 to 0 in favor of Trinity.

YALE IN POOR FORM TO TACKLE ARMY

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 20.—The Yale eleven left here this evening for its first out-of-town game of the season, the Army contest at West Point to-morrow. Aside from the Harvard game, it is the only match not played on Yale Field, and Head Coach Field said to-night that there was no doubt it would prove as stubborn a contest as any on the Yale schedule. Yale has been obliged to tackle West Point year after year with more players out of condition than is the case against Harvard or Princeton, and this season is no exception. More than half the members of the team are suffering from bruises which, although minor in their nature, have made it doubtful whether they would enter the game until within two or three days.

If it did not seem necessary to use them against West Point to win they would have been left at home. To-night it was announced that Charley Paul and McDevitt, who were thought to be reserved for another week before they returned to competition, would be in the game. Only the regular end, Gallauer, and Bomeisler, and the first string centre, Norman Read, cannot be used. Read is crippled for the season, and the ends will not be ready to resume play for two or three weeks.

Francis and Avery, the ends assigned to the frontier against the Army, are both experiments. Francis has played guard, and Avery is without experience save for the past two games Yale has played. Before that he was a third eleven player.

It was learned to-night that Captain Howe has been suffering from a cold all the week. This accounts for his failure to report at Yale Field for scrimmage. For the first time this week he led his men to-day, but only for signal drill. He will be compelled to play most of to-morrow's game, as his drop kicking is one of Yale's chief assets. He is far from being in the pink of condition, and would not enter the game to-morrow unless his presence were believed to be imperative.

The eleven spent nearly two hours on Yale Field this afternoon in signal and punting drill, and took an evening train for New York City. They will go up the Hudson to-morrow morning, and will spend to-morrow night in New York City, where they will be the guests of the Yale Club. The probable line-up:

The squad taken to West Point numbers thirty-five men. Two sets of backs will be sent into the game, possibly three. The second string includes Andersen, the former Wisconsin plunger; Ed Freeman, who has risen rapidly from the third eleven; and "Trinity" Church, the heavyweight whose line forcing has made a sensation for two or three weeks. Waters, Dunn and Smith, the third set, is the combination that has shown form the past two weeks.

Dick Merritt will play part of the game if Capt. Howe retires. Walter Camp, Jr., Billy Howe and Davis may get a chance at end, and Warren and Perry, the substitute tackles, are almost sure to play a large part of the game. Paul has a bad ankle. Yale is weak in substitute guard material. Parker and Loree being taken along. Cooney may play a large part of the game at centre, as Ketcham's ankle is in poor shape.

Yale hopes have run high of avenging last year's defeats by Brown and West Point with clean-cut victories this season. The condition of the Eli team for to-morrow's game indicates that it is likely to have no easy time realizing this hope against the Army.

The policy adopted by Head Coach Field in the final week's preparation has been to perfect the team in straight football, and to leave the preparation of the complicated formations until the final three weeks before the Princeton and Harvard matches. Dave Fultz, the former Brown University player, will umpire to-morrow's game, and Dr. Carl Williams of the University of Pennsylvania will referee. The periods will probably be twelve minutes long.

BIG CROWD FOR WEST POINT.

Seats All Gone, Requests Still Pouring In for Game with Elis.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Oct. 20.—The cadets put on the finishing touches this afternoon for the Yale game to-morrow with a long signal drill and the practicing of goal kicking by Dean and Keyes. Every effort was made to-day to drain the field, and while still quite wet it has improved considerable.

In the practice last night Littlejohn injured an old sprain, and it has proved more serious than at first was thought. This morning he found it necessary to go to the hospital, and he will be unable to play in the Yale game to-morrow. Weyand, a plebe, who has been doing some good work at tackle, was selected to fill Littlejohn's place.

It has finally been decided to start Sibert at centre instead of Walmsley. Sibert lacks the weight of Walmsley, but his passing is considered more reliable.

With the old West Point Hotel closed, the question of where the multitude that fail to provide a dinner before coming to the game is up. A tent has been erected on the parade grounds, and the ladies of the post will serve coffee and sandwiches, the proceeds to go to the Army Relief Society. Lieut. Glassford of the drawing academy has also prepared a handsome souvenir score card, which will be on sale for the benefit of the relief society.

To-night tickets for every available seat had been distributed, and Lieut. Matthews, Secretary of the Athletic Association, is swamped with applications that still pour in. The line-up, given out to-night as the one to face Yale is:

PORT DEPOSIT, Md., Oct. 20.—Tome School will play the strong Atlantic City H. S. football eleven here to-morrow. The coaches have been working hard all week, endeavoring to correct the many defects which were evident in the two previous games. A few new plays have been tried, but most of the time was used to prefect those most effective last Saturday against Western H. S. of Washington. Edsall and Konow will be out of the game on account of injuries, while a substitute end will have to be sent in for Chapel, who is down in his class work. Coach Mayser is looking for a hard game, as the seashore boys held the strong Central High eleven of Philadelphia to a small score last week.

Indians Play in Pittsburgh.

Special to The New York Times.

CARLISLE, Penn., Oct. 20.—The Carlisle Indians line-up in to-morrow's important game against the University of Pittsburgh at Pittsburgh will be the strongest the Indians can show at this stage of the season. The squad in care of Coach Warner and the football doctor left to-day and will stop at the Hotel Schenley overnight. Capt. Burd expressed his belief that Carlisle would win, but said that his men would take no chances, and would give the collegians the best in their repertoire. Warner would not comment on the prospects for the game.

Lafayette Arrives at Syracuse.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Oct. 20.—Accompanied by fifty rooters, the Lafayette football team arrived here this evening from Easton, Penn., for its game to-morrow with the Syracuse University eleven. Lafayette averages a few pounds lighter than Syracuse, but expects to carry off the honors. A large crowd will witness the contest.

CORNELL COACHES ANXIOUS.

Game To-day Will Decide Whether Team Has Improved as Expected.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Oct. 20.—In Washington and Jefferson to-morrow Cornell faces a team of which little is known here and which has not played the Ithacans in a long time. While the Ithacans do not expect a repetition of the last week's disaster at the hands of Pennsylvania State, a good game is expected, and the coaches are waiting for it rather anxiously to see whether the team has made any improvement at all. For an hour this afternoon Quarter Back Eddie Butler ran the 'Varsity through a number of new plays and other older and similar formation, and the team seemed to be going well. What particularly impressed the coaches was the snap and the get-up of most of the men.

The shake-up contemplated in the eleven following the scrimmage work this week has apparently been postponed pending their showing in the game to-morrow. At all events the only changes in the line-up as compared with that against Pennsylvania State will be at right end, where Stimson, if he looks in good physical condition to-morrow, will take Guyer's position. Coach Van Orman said this afternoon that he wanted to play Stimson if he could, but he was not sure that he was feeling well enough to get into the line-up.

Krogstad and Champaign are to play the 'Varsity tackles, but it is not unlikely that Williamson and Davidson will be sent into the line-up before the game is over. Munns and O'Rourke, the 'Varsity guards, have been cautioned to be careful and avoid doing anything which may mean penalties. Whyte will play centre, Butler will again be in his old position at quarter back, while Hawkins and O'Connor will play half backs and Hill full back with a possibility of Underhill also getting in. The weight of members of the team to-day showed that the eleven averages about 174 pounds now. Capt. Munk is the heaviest, he weighing 188. The backfield is well up with Hawkins at 165, Butler 167, O'Connor 176, Underhill 181, and Hill 173.

OFFICIALS FOR BIG GAMES.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 20.—The Harvard and Yale football managements have agreed with the Central Board of Officials on the men who are to officiate at the Harvard-Yale game at Cambridge, Nov. 25. Also Harvard and Princeton have got together with the Central Board. These agreements on officials have come much earlier than for many seasons, and the usual misunderstanding that comes just when the teams are getting on edge is avoided, and the managers themselves David L. Fultz of Brown; field judge, are a bit overtrained. The officials for the Harvard-Yale game will be: Referee, William S. Langford of Trinity; umpire, William Morice of the University of Pennsylvania; linesman, Joseph B. Pendleton of Bowdoin.

These are the officials who ran the Harvard-Yale game so satisfactorily at New Haven last year. The referee for the Harvard-Princeton game at Princeton, Nov. 4, will be the same as for the later championship match—William S. Langford. Dr. Carl S. Williams of the University of Pennsylvania will be the umpire, and Dr Albert H. Sharpe of Yale the field judge. Joe Pendleton will be head linesman, as in the Harvard-Yale game.

Faulks Defeats Williams.

Buddy Faulks of Newark decisively defeated Frankie Williams of Coney Island last night at the Brighton Beach A. C. in a hard-fought battle, which went the ten-round limit. Faulks had the better of seven rounds, with Williams getting the call in two of the others, with the remaining session even. In the third round Williams cut his opponent's right lip, and succeeded in almost closing Faulks's right eye in the seventh. In the next round Faulks evened up the score in this respect and closed Williams's left eye with a right swing, which rather left the Coney Island lad at a disadvantage for the remainder of the battle. A good-sized crowd witnessed the bouts, which were introduced by several good preliminaries.

NOTES OF THE ATHLETES.

Barnard athletes have begun training for the Fall and Winter scholastic sports, and principally for the Columbia cross-country race, scheduled for Nov. 18, over a four-and-a-half-mile course from Van Cortlandt Park to South Field. That the school has the nucleus of a strong all-around team was made apparent yesterday when the lads were put through their paces by Billy Queal, America's greatest distance runner, who will coach the youngsters in their road work from now on to the time of the Columbia race. Queal speaks glowingly of Barnard's prospects, and confesses that the boys have all the earmarks of "good ones" from a competitive standpoint, as well as from the spirit shown in their initial outing, when each showed himself possessed of undeniable pace.

At the recent election of officers for the coming year, held at the Xavier Club, the following were the successful candidates: F. V. O'Kane, President; Thomas Kearn, Vice President; W. McDonald, Second Vice President; D. Manning, Treasurer; J. J. Geraty, Secretary. The following were elected members of the Board of Governors: J. Dalton, Ed Wolfe, J. Hyland, J. Mooney, and J. J. Foley.

The next invitation road run of the Union Settlement A. C. will be held over its three-and-a-half-mile course to-morrow at 3:30 P. M. Hereafter the runs will be held on the second and fourth Sunday over the four-and-a-half and the three-and-a-half mile courses, respectively.

Snail Eaters in Despair.

PARIS, Oct. 13.—The snail eaters of Paris—and they far outnumber those who declare that frogs' hind legs form the finest dish in the world—are in a state of mind bordering on despair. Owing to the recent period of very hot and dry weather, which created a shortage in their favorite food of cabbages and lettuce, the grown-up snails have got sadly out of condition, and as the death rate among the juvenile members of the breed has been enormous scarcity is the rule, and wholesale dealers are talking of raising their prices for 1,000 Red Burgundies, the variety most appreciated by amateurs, from the usual 15f or 20f to 40f. If this is the position so far as the snail trade is concerned the prospect is even more gloomy as regards frogs, which, when brooks and ponds went dry, had no choice left them but to expire, which they did in shoals. So two queer kinds of edibles will be virtually eliminated for some time from the menus of those who delight in such dishes.

Don't Quote Mother.

My advice to husbands who wish to avoid divorce is this: Don't quote mother. Call up your wife while at business and ask how she is, and tell her that you called her up just to hear her voice. Bring her a box of candy; one of the new books that she is interested in; a flower, even if it is faded and you have picked it up off the street; a pretty pin or handkerchief—and don't ever lay your head on your pillow at night without having done something to gain and obtain a firmer hold on your wife's love. Kiss her every day. At least once a month meet her downtown and take her to dinner and the theatre. Don't ever stop courting, for as soon as you do some other man will begin. Make your wife your companion. Take her out with you, and when you have to have a big time take your wife along, and the divorce evil will be lessened.—Judge Petit of Chicago in Leslie's.

New Powers of Music.

Among the numerous changes and developments in musical art during the last fifteen or twenty years none are more striking than those investing it with additional powers and claiming for it psychological achievements until now deemed impossible. New forms and processes of composition, too often forced and extravagant, together with the various transformations the art has undergone and the accessories with which it is overburdened to-day, have caused a revolution, which, if confirmed and its principles established, must ere long convert music into something quite different from what it has hitherto been. On all sides, from the ill-informed newspaper critic to the accomplished essayist and reviewer, we hear the same familiar tune with the same familiar metaphysical coda.—L. Gould in the London University Magazine.

LONDON'S WINTER SEASON.

Good Social Prospects in Spite of Court's Absence in India.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—Blinds are up and shutters are open in the houses of Mayfair and Kensington. Clubmen are flocking to town from their sojourns in the country or on the Continent, and by next week London's Winter season will be in full swing. During the eight weeks beginning Monday, Oct. 16, there will be a season of German opera and Russian ballet at Covent Garden. The Actresses' Franchise League matinée will be held at the Lyceum on Oct. 27. However, the most eagerly anticipated event in the musical world is the opening of Mr. Hammerstein's London Opera House in Kingsway, now promised for November.

The middle of October will see the return of the Court from Balmoral, although the King will visit the Duke of Richmond at Gordon Castle before he journeys south. The absence of the Court in India will, of course, militate against the season in its earliest stage. A number of people who would be entertaining before Christmas will be leaving for the Durbar early in November, and will not return until toward the end of January.

Many of the big hotels in the West End are now full, yet visitors are still coming in. "We are full up," said the manager of the Ritz Hotel, "but it is too early yet to venture an opinion. The King's visit to India will, of course, entice away a number of society people who would otherwise stay in London, but things are looking very well. Business is good in the West End, and people do not complain; and if they do not complain it means that they are satisfied."

"This season," said the manager of Claridge's Hotel, "will not approach last year's Winter, of course, but then, owing to the sudden death of the King, a large number of functions which would have been held earlier in the year were postponed until the Winter, and we had an abnormal time."

The Hotel Cecil is spending $60,000 to convert two-thirds of the big courtyard into a Winter garden and lounge, to be open, it is hoped, by the end of February. The new year, too, will see the Carlton Hotel recover from its cold douche of 600 tons of water and reopen its full measure of acommodation.

Said a well-known caterer in the neighborhood of Victoria: "I'm afraid that the King's visit to India may have its effect, but by January things ought to be in full swing; and there are a number of balls to come off that were postponed owing to the court mourning."

TALE OF TWO CHIMNEYS.

PARIS, Oct. 13.—Even among the boss-dominated towns of America it would be difficult to find a parallel to the proceedings of the official architects of the Paris schools as related in The Echo de Paris by M. Guibert, Municipal Councillor of the Necker district. M. Guibert's story concerns two chimneys. He recounts how one of these recently fell in, and, although the head mistress had written seven times no architect had put in an appearance to see about the repairs.

Probably, adds M. Guibert, they were too busy with the smoke conduit of the school in the Rue des Volontaires. Last month the masons turned up at this school to do some repairs, and in the course of their work they came across a flue in a small detached building which required repair. They set about their work with zeal. It was in vain that the school mistress pointed out to them that the whole building, chimney and all, was condemned and was to be pulled down. The workmen saw their duty clearly. The flue was defective. It was their job to put it right, whether the building was to be removed or not, and they did it. For two weeks they wrestled with the chimney, and finally left it drawing like a locomotive with the blast full on. Four days after the "fumists" had finished operations the house-breakers appeared on the scene and proceeded to tear down the building, new chimney included.

ROCK SALT FOR RIOTERS.

It has been suggested that something less deadly than leaden bullets should be used by our troops against rioters. It has been suggested that bullets might be made of sawdust and grease, but this is altogether impracticable, as such bullets would simply be atomized by the force of the explosion and atmospheric resistance. The suggestion is, however, a good one, inasmuch as it sets one thinking on a subject that we shall have to face very shortly.

The ordinary military rifle is a very powerful weapon. It has been designed for killing at very long range, and it is quite possible that under favorable circumstances at short range the same bullet might pass through twenty men.

When we have to meet a foreign enemy in the field we know what we have to deal with, and we provide ourselves with the very best instruments that science can produce to kill and wound as many as possible, but a totally different state of things obtains when we have a lot of rioters, largely our own countrymen, armed with stones, bricks, and bottles. They are quite unable to do any harm to our soldiers except at very short range, therefore it is not necessary for us to have long-range arms to combat them.

Disorderly, murderous mobs are constantly increasing in numbers, and each riot is fiercer and more determined than those that have preceded it. There is bound to be a great number of them in the future, which we shall have to deal with, whether we like it or not, therefore I hold that we should make a study of the subject and provide and use the best possible arms for the purpose.

In firing on the foreign enemy we seek to kill as many as possible; in firing on a mob our aim is to restore order with the smallest possble loss of life. But it must not be supposed for a single moment that large and turbulent mobs such as were lately found in Liverpool, and who fight like demons, can be subdued without the loss of some life. Some loss is inevitable, but let it be as small as possible, and let us, at least, attempt to avoid doing injury to any except those who are actually making war upon the soldiers or police.

Suppose the officer in command had 400 soldiers opposed, we will say, to 20,000 hooligans and strikers. It would be best to arm about 200 of them with very large bore, single-barrel shotguns, having rather short barrels, and these should be provided with cartridges of the ordinary type; but, instead of lead shot, they should be loaded with very coarse grains of hard rock salt, the grains being about the size of large peas. The salt has the advantage of being light, so that it does not penetrate very far, and, as it soon dissolves and runs out of itself, and as it is also an antiseptic, no surgical operation would be necessary.

Rock salt was used very successfully in the early Colonial days of New England.

Another hundred of the soldiers should be armed with the same kind of gun, but the cartridges should be loaded with a small charge of black powder and a very large charge of buckshot. These shot would not kill at a range of a few hundred feet; but at very close range of a few feet, where all the shot are in a lump, they would be fatal.

With these 300 guns the crowd could in all probability be kept at bay. Of course the buckshot would not be used until the salt had failed. Then, again, if the attack was very violent the whole 300 guns could be worked with buckshot. —Sir Hiram Maxim in The London Express.

Infant Mortality in Britain.

The mean annual mortality per 1,000 births, which had been 145 in 1876-80 and 139 in 1881-85, rose to 151 in 1891-95 and to 156 in the next five years. During this decade the two highest points ever recorded were reached with 161 in 1895 and 163 in 1899. It is not surprising that the subject began to attract attention and to excite alarm. But after 1901 a marked fall took place, and the downward tendency then started continued in single years, down to the present time. The last quinquennium has had a considerably lower rate than any previous one, and in 1909, the last year for which complete figures are available, the rate fell to 109.—London Times.

LOVE, MORALS, AND MUSIC.

London Psychologist Also Defines and Analyzes Phenomenon of Jealousy.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—The well-known psychologist, Dr. William Brown, delivered the inaugural address at King's College, London, this week. He took for his subject "Emotion and Morals," and analyzed the complex emotion called love as consisting of sorow, joy, fear, anger, and gratitude, all tinged with pleasure, which, to use his own words, formed a "prolonged and specialized emotion dominated by a central idea."

Jealousy he attributed into a sequence of emotions, each of which might possibly be complex, but were very definite in the way they followed one another.

"Jealousy," he said, "is a prolonged emotion consisting of fear and anger together with love concentrated on a certain object." It regularly follows a certain cycle, and a certain state of mental diathysis predisposes the subject to become jealous. First comes joy, then sorrow, next desire renewed, and usually joy again. He considered that psychology should be an introduction to religion, and that no system of ethics could be entirely free from our feelings.

As to the effect of music on morals, he recalled the fact that Plato expelled music from his republic because the Ionian and Lydian music was effeminate, while Dorian and Phrygian was exciting. Music he considered to have arisen as an expression of emotion chiefly in rhythm; at the present day in certain Kaffir tribes a mistake in the rhythm of a dance is punishable by death.

Only generalized emotions could be expressed by music, and not the emotions of daily life. The leit-motif, as used by Wagner, might be a true expression, but certainly the attributes of each key could not be classified. As one well-known authority said, E flat minor always expressed the feeling of the Trinity, while another has stated that it always awakened in him a sense of imminent catastrophe.

THE SUGAR MYSTERY.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—While writers on economics are blaming the Brussels Convention or last Summer's drought for the high price of sugar and the growing scarcity of that commodity, the people of Dundee are concerned with neither question, for sugar there is still doled out by the retailers at 2d. per pound.

Therein lies a mystery which the sugar brokers of Mincing Lane have not been able to fathom, although there are dark rumors of a reserve crop from the British West Indies, which by some accident had been placed upon the Dundee market.

As to the general shortage, it is also pointed out that it can in no wise be accounted for by the poor beetroot harvest, since a large cane crop more than made up for that deficiency. As to the Brussels Convention being blamed, the Mincing Lane brokers declare that the economists do not know what they are talking about. "Indeed," said a prominent broker, "if it were not for the Brussels Convention I do not know where we should be to-day. Whatever effect that arrangement might have originally created in the direction of hardening prices, had, it was pointed out, long ago expended itself. At the present juncture its influence is purely beneficent. There is no question that but for it the West Indian cane industry would have gone by now. They could not have lasted more than a year or two longer, and then in a crisis like this we should have been at the mercy absolutely of the Continent. As it is, the cane crop will be good, and what with the check that high prices invariably give to consumption the market may not go so very much higher after all."

THE REVISED ALDRICH PLAN.

The amendments to the tentative plan proposed by Senator ALDRICH for the adoption of the Monetary Commission indicate a praiseworthy stubbornness in principle and an equally praiseworthy openmindedness in detail. In order to appreciate the sanity of this procedure it is necessary to consider the gulf yawning for the wreck of reform if those who are agreed in principle are too insistent upon their own preference as to methods of attaining the end. The alternative to the Aldrich plan is a Democratic plan. There is nothing Republican or personal about the Aldrich plan, and there ought to be nothing partisan or personal in opposition to it, least of all any opposition springing from its association with the name of the Senator who has done the work necessary to bring it to its present forward stage. Yet there is plenty of this opposition both from negligible carpers and from those in the way of making their opposition felt.

One of Senator ALDRICH'S former Democratic colleagues has lent his name to a substitute providing that the Government should issue legal tenders direct to any bank wishing currency. Mr. BRYAN has advocated the same idea, with the addition of a guarantee of deposits. The proposal of such ideas, together with the suggestion even more influentially made, that the Aldrich plan should be called something else, indicates the prejudices to which it is thought necessary to pander by some who might be expected to exemplify sound thinking and acting.

Senator ALDRICH still proposes to substitute an asset currency for a bond-secured currency, but he has listened to those who have suggested danger of political or financial or local control contrary to the interests of the banks and their customers as a whole. In general accordance with the recommendations of the National Citizens' League he has provided for the election by the Directors of "twelve additional members, who shall fairly represent the industrial, commercial, agricultural, and other interests of the country, and who shall not be officers of banks." The Directorate is to be classified, and there are restrictions at each stage of election regarding the choice of more than limited numbers from any district. It is clear at once that New York cannot secure representation in proportion to its predominance in the banking world. Probably "Wall Street" could not secure one-half of its numerical due of Directors. It will make little difference, and the change may perhaps strengthen the proposal. The amendment may be meritorious, although the criticisms on which it is based were not altogether so.

The criticism that currency ought not to be made costly by a tax is met in connection with the retirement of the bonds on which currency is now issued. The 2 per cents on which the banks now are in danger of losing probably more than twenty millions of premiums which they have paid in order that the country might have currency are to be exchanged for 3s without the circulation privilege. The difference in interest is to be met by the National Reserve Association paying a franchise tax of 1½ per cent. upon the bonds transferred to it by the subscribing banks. This franchise tax includes the one-half per cent. circulation tax now collected, and thus apparently leaves the Government's position unchanged, but it waives its previous claim to banking profits.

Another important provision is that for the admission of other banking institutions of several classes in consideration of their approaching the standards required of National banks themselves. The criticism that the requirement of a legal minimum of reserves forbids the use of it at just the time that banking principles require liberal accommodation is met by allowing encroachment upon the reserves, but taxing the deficiency at the rate of 1½ per cent. for each 2½ per cent. of deficiency below 50 per cent. The prohibition of rediscounting loans upon Stock Exchange collateral is directed toward the tendency of our banks to degenerate into investment institutions. There is nothing to be said against them when conducted as such, but it is not strict banking for the banks of the United States to hold five billions of bonds. It would be better that banking resources so absorbed should be more directly used in banking. The provision that the notes of the Reserve Association may be used in reserves of other banks accords with present practice regarding National banknotes, and may perhaps be a necessary concession. It may be excused from the necessity of the case, even if it cannot be approved in principle. Reserves should be primary money, or at worst legal tenders, rather than promises to pay, however excellent the promise.

The proposal now enters upon its critical stage. It meets the demand for details when it was becoming insistent. Doubtless amendments may still be made, but more grudgingly at each stage of progress toward the time when the only way to deal with opposition is to vote it down. No reluctance should be felt in making any constructive changes, but factitious criticism ought not to be welcomed. In politics the threat of a worse candidate if one not wholly acceptable were rejected has proved effective. The situation is the same regarding the Aldrich bill. Let those who are criticising for the sake of criticism ponder the risk they run in weakening the only plan which has received and deserved praise.

SEPTEMBER FOREIGN TRADE.

Calamity hunters are warned away from the September trade returns. Never have we imported so much, and yet never before have we enjoyed an equal balance of trade in our favor. The reason necessarily is that never have we approached such a volume of September exports. The malefactors who are restraining trade have sold Europe $195,771,592 worth. And their accomplices in Wall Street are now engaged in lending Europe the money to buy with, as the high and rising exchange shows.

The details are hardly less interesting than the totals. It is encouraging to know that our exports of manufactures are growing amazingly, but that is an old story. Just when it is fashionable to say that we cannot raise enough farm stuff for our own requirements along comes a total sent abroad of $95,604,632. This is a little increase for one month of fifteen millions. For the elapsed time thus far the agricultural exports are for this year $582,669,296, against $466,493,322 last year. Larger totals may be expected later on when the cotton begins to move. This country never shows its wealth in a boom. It requires a little setback to reveal hidden reserves which surpass anything a railway or bank manager ever imagined, and which puzzles those who fancy we are poor because we are a little tangled by troubles which, serious as they are, do not touch the edge of our resources.

PRESIDENT TAFT'S MISSION.

He who can catch and keep up with the insurgents of the West must, indeed, be fleet of foot and nimble in turning corners. When the Payne-Aldrich bill was put upon the statute book two years ago the Northwest was seething with tariff reform ideas. The standpatters, triumphant, and with ranks then unbroken, were denounced as the betrayers of their party, and the guilt of a pledge solemnly given and ruthlessly broken was fastened upon them. Men burned the midnight candle to seek out new vices and deceptions in the act which Mr. ALDRICH had shaped at the behest of the protected interests.

Mr. TAFT went into the West to justify, to argue, to plead. He knew it was the enemy's country, he sought to make it the country of his friends. The ill-fortune that attended his Winona speech is well remembered. Insurgency rose against him. It was charged that, seeing his party divided, he had deliberately chosen to ally himself with the Old Guard of the Republican East. The insurgents were not placated, they were incensed.

But when the time came to consider in the Senate tariff reform measures passed by a Democratic House, the reform ardor of the Republican insurgents from the West had cooled amazingly. Even the moderate reductions sought to be accomplished in the reciprocity agreement found small favor with the chief men of the Republican insurgents, men like LA FOLLETTE and CUMMINS. Renouncing their earlier low tariff convictions, these men were unable to come to an agreement with Democratic revisionists. They have forgotten their indignation over the Payne-Aldrich tariff. The Republican Progressives who met in conference in Chicago the other day were silent on that subject.

But if there was any one principle of insurgency that was supposed to be rooted in unalterable conviction it was hostility to the trusts. In no part of the country were there more vociferous outcries that the corporation must be harassed and humbled, the big combinations brought to bar, and broken up. In the evident belief that insurgent hostility to the trusts was an enduring frame of mind, President TAFT set out upon a mission into the West. He made one or two speeches upon the tariff, seeking by plausible argument and appeal to justify his vetoes of the wool bill and the cotton bill. The insurgents appeared to listen with indifference when he spoke upon that subject. Then came those addresses in which he insisted that the Sherman act must be rigorously enforced, that the great combinations must be made to conform to the law.

The East quaked with new alarm, but a most astonishing change came over the spirit of the West. As with one accord the spokesmen of insurgency began to protest that the business of the country was being unnecessarily disturbed. They said to big business: Do you not see that we are your friends? How childish and unwarranted is your fear of us! Consider Senator LA FOLLETTE, the great chieftain of insurgency. His heart beats fondly for the industries of his country. Review the legislation of Wisconsin during his incumbency of the office of Governor and you will discover that he is not a destructive man, he is constructive. Trust him. Accept him, and you will escape the storms of persecution and find yourself sailing in calm waters. Senator CUMMINS lifted a persuasive voice in appeal to the business men of the country to have faith in insurgency. Senator JONATHAN BOURNE pleads for the holding of a grand powwow or council where the great captains of industry and the lawmakers at Washington may sit down together and take thought how large-scale production may be reconciled with the stern provisions of the law.

Confident that, in respect to the great restrainers of trade, he was going into the country of his friends, Mr. TAFT suddenly finds himself again in the enemy's country. He is bereft of an assenting audience. While he would take the trusts by the ear and lead them to punishment, the insurgents would take them by the hand and lead them gently and kindly back to the paths of righteousness and peace. In States where public opinion is subject to such swift vicissitudes, the labors of the political missionary become difficult. But if Mr. TAFT is forced to conclude that his Western tour has not brought him large political returns, he may comfort himself with the reflection that he has acquired valuable information as to the instability and shiftiness of the insurgents.

LAST CHANCE TO REGISTER.

The citizen who misses his opportunity to register at the polling place in his election district before 10 o'clock to-night will be deprived of his right to cast a vote on Nov. 7, and will not have the privilege to take part in the primary elections next March and September. The new direct primaries law goes into effect Nov. 15.

Only the voters who now register and enroll will have the right to express their preferences for delegates to the party conventions and candidates for office. It stands to reason that the registration this year should be larger, not smaller, than in other "off years." No public-spirited man, with the right of franchise, will care to lose his opportunity to vote in the primaries.

THE AUTUMN BOOKS.

It is a significant fact that the production of books is larger this year than it has been for five years past. There is much talk of depression in general business, but the publishers do not seem to feel it. More books have been published than usual, and the proportion of noteworthy books, especially in the field of fiction, is greater than ordinarily. The Autumn Book Number of THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW, to be published to-morrow as part of THE SUNDAY TIMES, will comprise forty-eight pages, and its principal feature, as in former years, will be an annotated list of recent and forthcoming publications, carefully compiled and classified. Besides the many columns of publishers' announcements, which have their own news value, and a copious selection of reviews of new books, this special number will also contain many valuable contributions by distinguished writers. The Rev. Dr. HENRY VAN DYKE writes of "Literature in Education," while WALLACE IRWIN lends his facile touch to a discussion of the whereabouts of Yankee humor in the twentieth century. RICHARD LE GALLIENNE'S subject is "The Return of the Dream to Literature," and LAURENCE GILMAN contributes "A Plea for the Modern Poet." WALTER CAMP and ARTHUR GUITERMAN are among the other special contributors.

In its sixteenth year this special number still holds its own as the foremost of its kind. It is welcomed yearly alike by booksellers and readers of books throughout the country. It presents a comprehensive view of the literary activities of the hour, and while it is an invaluable guide to selection for all book buyers, including the librarians, it has also a strong appeal to many thousands of readers who have scant leisure for reading books. It puts one closely in touch with the book world.

NEW YORK IN BALLET.

Cable dispatches have already made known to us some of the beauties and verities of the new ballet at the Empire Theatre in London called "New York." It seems to comprise a marvelous revelation, in picture, melody, and dance, of the spirit of this metropolis. Its author is Lieut. Col. NEWNHAM DAVIS, whose favorite theme is "La Vie de Luxe," which he associates in the eager minds of his millions of readers with filet of sole à la Marguery and the proper temperature for Chambertin. It must have been something of a wrench for NEWNHAM DAVIS to turn aside from this ever-fascinating subject to study the raw attitudes of Western civilization, but he has accomplished his purpose. His New York is filled with red Indians, Bowery boys, negroes, and the other dominant types of this neighborhood, intermingled with hosts of millionaire women seeking for titled foreigners. The time is Independence Day. The London Times is forced, because of its unfailing accuracy, to complain of one grave omission. There should be, it says, a dance of turkeys and cranberries. How could NEWNHAM DAVIS, after a lifelong devotion to gastronomics, fail to note pictorially and saltatorially the prevalence of roast turkey and cranberry sauce in New York on the Fourth of July? The rebuke of the Thunderer is appropriate and doubtless is keenly felt.

Well, we can burlesque London, in our variety theatres, and doubtless we do. Impossible English toffs, preposterous cockney dialect, and English manners travestied from the Irish-American point of view are common enough. No harm is done. We might not have thought here of New York as the subject of ballet. But if we had thought of a Fourth of July ballet we would never have been remiss in the matter of turkey and cranberry sauce. Few of us would care to risk the stern rebuke of the keenest and most accurate judge of all things mundane.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Suspicions of Honesty Groundless. Unpleasant as is the Snodgrass-Baker incident, it ought to have, and probably will have, the effect of removing or greatly weakening such doubts as have lingered in some minds whether the games in the so-called world championship series are played with absolute honesty, each of the contesting teams doing its very best to win in each encounter.

There is, of course, excuse, or at least explanation, for suspicion on this point in the obvious fact that there would be more money, and much more money, for the owners of the clubs if seven instead of four games were played. It is equally clear that they could prolong the series to its limit if they chose, and that they could do it without demanding of any player that he do less than his best—without demanding it, that is, of any player whom they decided to send into the field, for thus the strength of the two nines engaged could be adjusted to produce any desired result. Either interpretation, however, of what SNODGRASS did to BAKER—whether the spiking of the latter was intentional or unintentional—is indicative, almost demonstrative, of a fierce desire to win and to win as soon as possible. This fierceness of sincerity could hardly exist if anything like an "arrangement" had been made.

Strongest of all proofs that the games are quite honest, perhaps, is the fact that the players themselves have a large financial interest in the receipts from the first four games, and none at all in the remaining three, if it should be necessary to play them. Those whose attention to baseball is only episodic may not have noticed that 60 per cent. of the "gate money" in the first four games goes to the players, 60 per cent. of the 60 per cent. to the winners and 40 per cent. of it to the losers. As they get nothing from the others, they have about the strongest incentive that could be devised both to play to win and to play to win quickly. A prolonged contest and a close finish mean to them the doing of a lot of unremunerated work, for professional baseball is work, and work of the very hardest kind.

Nobody who really knows anything about modern baseball, however, seems to have any doubt that the games are honest. Everybody concerned in the "sport"—it is really a business—has forgotten what happened to it when public confidence in its honesty was lost, or how slow, hard, and expensive was the task of recovering that confidence after the game was saved from the gamblers who had ruined it.

Expectations Doubly Disappointed. No compass needle on a man-of-war or on a tramp steamer loaded with railroad iron ever had more difficulty in deciding which way to point than does sympathy in the case of that woman of 50, living a little way up our large river, who married a boy of 18, only last month, and now announces the firm intention of divorcing him.

Just how she is going to accomplish her intention in this State is not apparent, for the one charge she brings against him is that he has proved a disappointment as a business partner or assistant manager in her three large furniture stores. It seems that as an employe in a less important position the youth displayed such industry and intelligence that his employer deemed him worthy of higher and heavier responsibilities. Why she did not follow the usual course in such cases and content herself with giving him the work she considered him competent to do is not revealed. The fact that increased pay commonly goes with promotion may or may not have decided her to adopt the expedient, at least immediately economical, of marriage.

However that may be, the experiment has proved a failure and both parties to the contract are tired of it. The woman says that her husband promptly developed those boyish qualities the absence of which, before the wedding, had won her admiration and fixed her heart. He wants to be, and for that matter is, out all day playing with the other boys, and is of no use whatever in any of the three furniture stores. The boy, on the other hand, says, "I didn't understand that I was to work as hard as she wanted me to," and the more quickly he can be set free the better he will like it.

Thus do youth and—well, and maturity—again illustrate the equal capacity of both to make mistakes. Why each did not see, she that her plan and he that his, would not work is doubtless as little of a mystery to them, now, as it must have been from the beginning to everybody who knew the circumstances. There is, probably, some reason for scolding both parties to this marriage, but hardly a chance that it would do any good. To make a world, it takes all sorts of people, according to the proverb. Like all proverbs, that one is false, but, as so often happens, it makes a convenient comment when there is really nothing to say—when the facts speak for themselves.

Seemingly Sharing the Burden. Among many other illustrations of what can be done with expensive paper and elaborate type that come to this office to serve as basis and authority for news of the sort which by an almost unpardonable synecdoche is called "social," one invitation to a wedding has attracted attention. It did so because the parents of the bride and bridegroom take equal parts in issuing it and it bears the names of both.

The ceremony is to be performed, as is so often the case, nowadays, not in a church or in the home which the bride is deserting, but in a place of public assemblage better adapted for festival and sacramental happenings than are the great majority of urban residences. That fact may account for, or have something to do with, the innovation which the card discloses.

Whether the two families share the expenses of the wedding, as well as unite in issuing the invitations to it, is not revealed, and inquiries on that subject would of course be impertinent. One can, however, make the logical deduction without discourtesy, and one can even go further and say that such a division of a burden that often bears heavily upon a single family—by custom and tradition always that of the bride—is or would be sensible enough to command the approval of all except those to whom only the familiar and the established are right.

THE McCABE "JOKER."

Secretary Wilson, Not Congressman Scott, Suggested It to Committee.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

My attention has just been called to an editorial in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Sept. 28, in which appears the following statement:

> It was Chairman Scott of the Committee on Agriculture who helped Mr. McCabe smuggle through a "joker" in the Appropriation bill for 1911 which reads: "And hereafter the legal work of the Department of Agriculture shall be done under the supervision and direction of the Solicitor."

The records show (see hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, U. S. Senate, on H. R. 18,162; Feb. 19, 1910) that this paragraph was inserted after the Appropriation bill had passed the House, by the Senate committee, upon the personal request of Secretary Wilson. When asked why he desired to have this new language inserted, the Secretary replied: "For economy's sake, principally." He then explained in a few words that up to that time the Forest Service had maintained a law division of its own, but that he desired now to consolidate this division in the office of the Solicitor, where the legal work of all the other bureaus of the department was done, partly in the interest of economy and partly, he added, "because there is no necessity for having more than one legal officer in the department." "That is perfectly plain," was the comment of Senator Warren, Chairman of the committee, who at once passed on to other matters. I was not consulted in regard to the amendment and knew nothing about it until the Senate committee made its report. When it came before the conference committee, along with nearly a hundred other Senate amendments, the explanation of the Secretary was given by the Senate conferees, and I voted with my two colleagues from the House to accept it, none of us having any other thought than that it was consistent and in the interest of good administration as well as of economy to have all the legal work of the department done under the supervision and direction of the chief law officer of the department. No one, either in the Senate committee or in the Senate, where the bill was debated at length, or in the conference committee, raised the question that the addition of these three lines would in any way affect the enforcement of the pure food law.

Without discussing now the propriety or impropriety of the amendment, I submit that the record shows I had nothing to do with its insertion in the bill and that my responsibility for its remaining in the bill is shared by the other five members of the conference committee. As to the departmental order which followed it—and this also is referred to without regard to the propriety or impropriety of it—of course I had nothing to do with that, was not consulted about it, and knew nothing of it until it recently became a subject of newspaper comment.

WOMEN TEACHERS' PLATFORM

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of Oct. 14 Margaret Doane Gardiner of Albany denies the justice of the claim of the women teachers of New York to equal pay. As you found space for her letter, will you not, in a spirit of simple fairness, find space for this reply?

"Can we not discuss the schools, the great hope of the Nation, simply with a view to making them do their best work?" is part of the question asked by Miss Gardiner. It is just because we do want to make schools do their best work that we women teachers stand unalterably on the platform of equal pay for equal work.

Why should men be paid more to exercise "their manly influence" and inculcate "their manly point of view" than women who exercise their womanly influence and inculcate their womanly point of view? How can an example of manliness be worth more than an example of womanliness?

There is nothing so bad for the men teachers in our school system at this time as this very discrimination in pay which Miss Gardiner approves. What would be thought of a business employer who said to one class of employes: "Although you are working side by side with fellow-workmen who do the same work, under the same conditions, yet I shall never pay them as much as I pay you; never put them on terms of equality with you. I shall always protect you from open competition with them by paying you more and them less, no matter what sort of work you or they may do." Would such a business policy keep the protected class of employes up to the standard? Would such a business policy bring the best mental and moral fibre to the top?

What can one think of the courage, justice, and manliness of men who are unwilling to be put on terms of financial equality with the women who are doing the same work?

The sooner the schools of New York City make justice the principle of their payrolls the better for all concerned; better for the men teachers, who can then desist from their unmanly opposition to schedules which take not one dollar from the salary of any man in the schools; better for the women, who can then cease from a struggle which they will never give up till success is achieved, and better, far better, for the school children, so largely of foreign strain, who, when they know that New York City has put its women teachers on an equality with its men, will have received the most impressive object lesson in a fundamental American principle: "Equality before the law"—a lesson which these children of foreign strain need, especially in regard to women.

The distinguished jurist, Sir Frederick Pollock, who has just closed his lectures on the common law at Columbia University, declared that justice is a perpetual quest and that the very spirit of the law is to carry the idea of equal public justice and ordered right out into the world.

We have indeed found justice a most difficult quest for six years. Over and over again we have so completely disproved the assertions of Miss Gardiner's and Mr. Keener's letters of the 14th that it is not necessary to combat them further. Many times have we shown that the taxes will not be unduly increased, and that no man's existing salary will be lowered.

And now, because we carry in our hearts "this ideal of equal public justice" for women teachers we will never cease from our efforts till this ideal of justice is embodied in our law.

Apply to a Magistrate.

As THE TIMES has taken an open stand in its defense of the Sullivan law, I would like to ask a few questions. As a one-time member of a well-known revolver club, I would like to become informed as to what path to follow to become the lawful possessor of a pistol without being mulcted to the amount of $10 for a police permit.

MAYOR GAYNOR ANSWERS.

City of New York,
Office of the Mayor.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read with interest your editorial this morning on taxes. Among other things you say:

> It is worth the while of all who dislike the addition of unnecessary millions to the budget to ask whether there is any connection between rents and taxes.

In one of my messages to the Common Council last year I said on that subject as follows:

> It is not meet for tenants, to say nothing of landlords, that real estate be overburdened by taxation. That could only result in lack of repairs and improvements. Those who loosely entertain the false economic notion that taxes fall on the tenant and not on the owner will not be able to see this. But every landlord knows that he cannot add his taxes to rents. If he could he would not care how high taxes grew. He would simply throw them on his tenants. The amount of rents depends on the supply and demand of houses. The greater the supply the lower are rents, even though taxes may grow higher. Rents do not rise and fall with taxes. But excessive taxes may discourage building, and in that way temporarily raise rents.

I suppose that is a true economic statement. May I also assure you that no unnecessary millions will be added to the budget, as you seem to fear. Much stuff of a petty political kind is now being said, some of it unfortunately by public officials in moments of enthusiastic forgetfulness, but that ought to influence no honest or sensible person.

I also note your editorial about the Equal Pay bill. You say that I say that it makes an increase in the tax rate of only "four mills." No, I said only four-tenths of a mill, as your news columns show. That makes an increase of 4 cents on a valuation of $100, of 40 cents on $1,000, of $4 on $10,000, of $40 on $100,000, and so on.

You also say I "foolishly committed" myself to the equal pay principle before I was elected Mayor. No, I did no such thing. I never committed myself to it or favored it before I was Mayor, and I have now passed upon it with an entirely free mind. I once presided at a meeting called to discuss the matter, but expressly stated that I had not made up my mind about it and would not commit myself to it.

May I add that instead of taxes in the City of New York being unusually high, they are much lower than in any other city in the State. I have the tables of taxation in the other cities before me as I write. May I also add that over in Brooklyn before the greater city was formed we were paying $2.86 in the hundred on a valuation relatively as high as the present valuation. The same was true of Long Island City. By annexation the taxes in these two boroughs were cut down nearly one-half. Let us have the facts as they were and as they are. When the outlying boroughs with their high taxes were taken in, their taxes became much less, while those of the old City of New York had to go up accordingly. Nevertheless our rate is not above $1.73. The increases in valuations last year were principally in respect of property which had theretofore been grossly undervalued in comparison with other property. I pointed all that out fully. There is no longer any favoritism, not even in the case of real estate owned by newspaper establishments. All are valued on the same basis, and those who were formerly favored by political influence are quite noisy about it.

Exhibiting the War Fleet.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The frank announcement of the Secretary of the Navy that he is proposing to assemble all the men-of-war that can conveniently be spared in New York Harbor for advertising purposes excites interest. Secretary Meyer has certainly been a good advertiser for the navy. His distribution of men-of-war through the West and South and wherever a craft could float, in order to popularize the service, was an entirely new departure, and he gave to many people of the country their first view of a warship. He extends his principle in bringing the ships here, with every arrangement and accommodation for their examination and exhibition to the people of this city and the country tributary. It will be interesting and probably valuable. Whether it is exactly the thing to have a navy kept up for show purposes is another matter.

But sooner or later the expense of all this magnificent outlay must be brought forcibly to the minds of the people, and when the cost is made known a good many questions will have to be answered.

Government Stenographers' Pay.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

An article appears in to-day's TIMES to the effect that young men are wanted to take stenographic positions in the Government service, at salaries of $840 to $900 to start, with sure prospects of advancement.

The undersigned, as a former stenographic employe in the Federal service, considers it entirely proper and most desirable that "the other side of the matter" should also be stated. It is an acknowledged fact that, in order to get such a position, a young man must first pass a rigid test, which, generally speaking, can only be accomplished after long and continued practice and several years' experience. It is fair to expect that competent employes in any service should receive commensurate compensation, hence the reason for the great desire on the part of the Federal authorities securing more male stenographers is very evident. If the Federal service demands competent stenographers, it should pay adequately for it, and not until it does can it hope to obtain the services of the better class of stenographers.

A Correction.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I suppose one or both of the men concerned will promptly notify you of the error in the heading of letter on editorial page this morning from Theron G. Strong, which heading characterizes him as President of the City Club. Charles Howard Strong is the man who enjoys that distinction. Theron G. Strong, a graduate of the University of Rochester, son of a former Justice of the New York Supreme Court, the Rochester District, is the older man; he has practiced law in this city at least twenty-five years. Charles H. Strong of the City Club, successor to Mr. McAneny as President of it, is a native of Illinois, a graduate of Harvard University and of its Law School, married into a branch of the Longfellow family, and has practiced his profession here long enough to be very well known at the bar. Both are patriotic citizens.

President Taft's Wanderlust.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Last December an article appeared in THE TIMES containing a semi-official statement that President Taft "had attained the highest automobile record ever held by a President of the United States." Now President Taft proposes to add to it the highest record for traveling of any President of the United States, and that there may be no question about it, he will lap over a few hundred miles.

Is this wanderlust to be made a Presidential duty? Does not President Taft feel that he owes it to the country to maintain the dignity of the office the people have entrusted to his care? Does he not know that he is trifling with the confidence of the people who have placed their confidence in him?

THANKS TO THE MAYOR FOR EQUAL PAY BILL

LIKENS CRITICS TO 'MARY ANN'

Mayor Says She Slapped Her Husband's Face, Pleasing Herself, but Not Hurting Him.

Twoscore women school teachers headed by Miss Grace Strachan, President of the Interborough Association of Women Teachers, called on Mayor Gaynor at the City Hall yesterday and thanked him for signing the Equal Pay bill providing for the same salaries which are paid to men teachers in the corresponding grades. Miss Strachan amid applause likened the Mayor's act to the signing of the Magna Charta and the Declaration of Independence.

"We believe that only a great man could rise above tradition of past centuries and approve such a bill," she said. "For the first time in history it will be written in the statutes of the State that there shall be no discrimination in salary against woman on account of her sex. True men and women through countless ages will consciously or unconsciously reflect the greatness of your act by the greater freedom and nobility of their lives. We fervently thank God for sparing you and permitting you to continue the work of uplift and progress to which you have devoted your life for so many years, and we pray that He will continue to give you greater strength and courage for many years to come. In the name of all the women teachers of this imperial city and in the name of millions of women yet unbound and unborn we thank you."

Mayor Gaynor said in reply:

"I had no notion of a large committee like this. I thought it was a committee to ask me to attend some public meeting, and I had already made up my mind that I would have to decline. I certainly feel gratified at what Miss Strachan has said in behalf of you all, and I do not think that what I did was in any sense a great act. I notice that some of our friends here who see evil in everything are already saying that it was a very little act. I was just reading about it before I came in—an article that somebody showed me in a newspaper. It seems to be thought that I have destroyed the taxpayers. I never use that phrase at all and have not done it for twenty-five years. And those of you who remember me over in Brooklyn when I was trying to do on the outside of Government what I am now trying to do on the inside remember that I always used to say "rentpayers and taxpayers." Except for the carpenters who are at work and the blacksmiths who are striking anvils and the men who are in business, and except that all of them are paying rent, I do not think the landlords would have much money to pay taxes with. Nor have I seriously affected the tax bills. The truth is I have added by that act four-tenths of a mill to the tax rate, so you school teachers can figure that up quicker than I can. It means on every $100 the taxpayer will pay 4 cents more. It means that a man who has a house worth $10,000 will pay $4 more, and it means that the rich man who has $100,000 in real estate will pay only $40 more. So I guess none of them are laying awake thinking much about that overnight. Of course, the newspaper editors who are distressed about it are a great deal more distressed than the landlords are. But you know they have to say something, and they have to stick their pens into somebody.

"I don't want to be vain, but I feel sometimes like the great big man with a little bit of a wife. She used to come up and slap his face and thump him and call him names in the presence of his neighbors, and when one of them said to him one day:

"'Why do you put up with it?'

"'Why,' he said, laughingly, 'Why shouldn't I put up with it? It doesn't hurt me and it pleases Mary Ann.'

"So that is always the case to some extent with the Mayor of the City of New York, and unless the people treat the Mayor badly he has not much reason to be distressed about what a few people who want to teach him keep saying about him or to him. Now I am very glad that you came here. I have tried to point out in the memorandum which I wrote to go with the bill to the Governor that this is going to be no injustice to the men teachers. Why, I have letters from men teachers saying it reduces their salaries. Did you ever hear such a thing? Why, it reduces the salary of nobody at all. The schedules passed by the Board of Education last May may reduce what some would get in promotion, but this act did not do that. If it is done at all it is done by the schedules of the Board of Education passed last May. That will all wash out right.

"And I also said another thing which you women will have to look out for and that is this, that now you are on equal salary with the men I am afraid there will be an eternal propensity to employ the men in place of the women. So long as you were paid less than the men there was a constant economical reason for appointing you in place of the men. Now that you are on even terms with the men I must warn you that you will have to keep your own end up. You cannot send a committee here for me to do that. Now, the pen—here is the pen. Miss Brady wanted the pen, but Miss Strachen is entitled to it.

"I want to add a word. It has been said in some quarters that I was committed to your side of the case several years ago. I presided at a meeting in Brooklyn several years ago but told the committee that came to me that I was not committed, that I would not speak in favor of it, and at the meeting I said I was not committed, but that I came there simply to hear what could be said pro and con. I never decided until I signed the official paper which did decide it. Some people do not understand that or do not want to."

The teachers then formed in line and all shook hands with the Mayor. As he left the room they gave him a parting cheer. The Mayor gave the pen with which he signed the bill to Miss Strachan.

SAY, ARE YOU GOING TO VOTE?

Are you one of those men who have fault to find
With the way that your city is run—
Who have often the governing powers maligned
For the things they've omitted, or done?
Or improvements that you would promote?
Then, say, have you registered yet, my friend?
And, say, are you going to vote?

Mere talking will nothing avail.
You must enter the lists, you must storm the redoubt,
Not idly conditions bewail.
If a wreck you'd avoid all your strength you must lend,
Then, say, have you registered yet, my friend?
And, say, are you going to vote?

You live in a free, broad, and unfettered age,
Where franchise is every man's right.
Then do well your part, and with courage engage
In this worthy Good Government fight.
Then, say, have you registered yet, my friend?

MANY DEBUTANTES FOR WASHINGTON

GREAT HEIRESSES LACKING

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—The débutante season, which usually is taken very seriously in Washington, will this year derive its greatest importance from the official buds rather than from resident families. As there are no great heiresses in the field this year the entertaining in prospect will return to the simpler forms of afternoon teas, with small and early dances.

To offset this slump in the home market, there will be an unprecedented number of Congressional buds to bloom in December. Four Senators' daughters to make their bow will be Miss Lucy Smith of Georgia, Miss Laura Hitchcock of Nebraska, Miss Carrie Chamberlain of Oregon, and Miss Kern of Indiana.

Miss Laura Burleson of Texas, who has already had a preliminary view of society as the guest of Mrs. John B. Henderson at Bar Harbor; Miss Henry, also the daughter of a Texas Representative, and Miss Eleanor Reyburn, daughter of the former Representative from Philadelphia and sister of the present member from the Philadelphia district, will also come from the Congressional circle.

Miss Genevieve Clark, daughter of the Speaker, notwithstanding frequent mention in this connection, is not a débutante, being just 16, with two years more in the schoolroom before she blossoms into society.

The Cuban Minister and Mme. Rivero have two young daughters, who will follow the American fashion of entering society with a débutante tea.

Miss Emily Beatty, daughter of the commandant of the Washington Navy Yard, by reason of her own charm, as well as her father's position, will be a leading belle as well as bud in naval circles, her formal presentation being fixed for Dec. 6.

Miss Mary Howry, daughter of Judge Charles B. Howry; Miss Elizabeth Reid Rogers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Reid Rogers of this city and New York; Miss Montgomery, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Emile Montgomery; Miss Celestine Finley, youngest daughter of the President of the Southern Railway, and Miss Hildegarde Portner, daughter of Robert Portner, are among the few débutantes from resident families.

The Chargé d'Affaires of Sweden and Mme. Ekengren, who have been spending the early Autumn in the Berkshires, returned to town yesterday for the Winter. They have taken for the season the residence 1,304 Connecticut Avenue, the home of Mme. Ekengren's mother, Mrs. John P. Jackson, who is passing the Winter in Europe.

The newly appointed Minister from the United States to Costa Rica, Mr. Einstein, will be entertained at breakfast to-morrow by the Minister from Costa Rica and Mme. Calvo. The latter have invited a large company to meet the American Minister at Rauscher's.

Ex-Senator and Mrs. Foraker and Miss Foraker arrived to-day to pass several months at their Sixteenth Street home.

Mr. and Mrs. Victor Kauffmann have returned from their Summer home in the White Mountains to take possession of their new home, 1,708 New Hampshire Avenue.

The Naval Attaché of the Brazilian Embassy and Mme. De Azevedo have taken an apartment at the Kenesaw for the coming season.

Mrs. Henry G. Sharp has returned from New England, where she passed the Summer and joined Gen. Sharp at their Washington home for the Winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Foster, who passed the last year in a trip around the world, have arrived home, and, pending the opening of their Sixteenth Street home, have an apartment at the Cairo.

Gen. and Mrs. M. V. Sheridan, who passed the Autumn at Atlantic City, are at the Portland for the Winter.

Mrs. Terry, widow of Rear Admiral Silas Terry, U. S. N., has gone to Kentucky to pass several weeks before sailing for Italy, where she will join her daughter, Mme. Camperio, for the Winter. Lieut. Camperio, formerly Naval Attachéé of the Italian Embassy in this city, is now with the Italian fleet.

William W. Cocks, former Congressman from the First District, whose marriage to Miss Jessie F. Wright of Flushing, L. I., was celebrated on April 29 in the old Friends' Meeting House in Rutherfurd Place, this city, has left on a trip around the world with his bride. His house at Westbury, L. I., has been taken by Mr. and Mrs. W. Seward Webb, Jr. Mrs. Webb was formerly Miss Gertrude Emily Gaynor, eldest daughter of Mayor Gaynor, and was married to Mr. Webb last May in Wilmington, Del.

NEWS OF NEWPORT.

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 20.—Capt. Cameron McRae Winslow, who successfully passed his examination this week for the rank of Rear Admiral and who is to have a division in the Atlantic Fleet, returned to-night to visit his family. Capt. Winslow intends to make Newport his home, as he has been doing for many years, and as Mrs. Winslow, formerly Miss Havemeyer, did previously. Capt. Winslow, during the Spanish war, as a Lieutenant, cut the cables out of Cuba, which shut off the Spaniards communicating with Spain.

After making preparations to guard against damage to property from the mortar and rifle firing from Fort Adams and Fort Wetherell to-day in the confines of Halidon Hill, the ocean drive and other sections over which the shells from these guns are to throw tons of metal, nothing but a few trial shots were discharged. These did not effect the homes to any extent, but what will happen when the guns and mortar fire is continuous for a week or more remains to be seen. To-morrow, if the weather is favorable, the target practice will begin.

HERBERT G. SQUIERS DIES IN LONDON

HE WON FAME AT PEKING

Herbert Goldsmith Squiers, former Minister to Cuba and to Panama and First Secretary of the American Legation at Peking during the Boxer uprising, died in London on Thursday, according to cablegrams received in this city yesterday by several of his friends.

Since he left Panama, two years ago, Mr. Squiers has been known to have been in poor health. He spent last Winter cruising on his yacht with his wife on the Mediterranean. The cablegrams received yesterday state that his death occurred in a London hotel, at which he has recently been staying with his family. His wife, who was a Miss Harriet Bard Woodcock, and his younger daughter, Helen, were with him. His other daughter, Gladys, who married Lieut. Harry H. Housseau, a member of the Panama Commission, three years ago, had been with him up to a few days before his death, when she sailed for Panama. His death is believed to have been due to heart disease. Mr. Squiers was only 52 years old, and his death, according to his friends here last night, is due to the fidelity with which he undertook his diplomatic duties in the tropics.

According to J. Mayhew Wainwright, who has been handling most of Mr. Squiers's business in this country for the last few years, Mr. Squiers was in splendid health when he first took up diplomatic work in Cuba. But the climate of the tropics so undermined his constitution that, according to Mr. Wainwright, his health was wrecked when he left Panama two years ago. He had spent most of his time since then in traveling in hope of recovering his strength.

Mr. Squiers was born in Madoc, Canada, in 1859. He was the son of John T. and Elizabeth J. Squiers. He was educated entirely in this country, studying in the Canandaigua Academy, the Minnesota Military Academy, the Maryland Agricultural College, and graduating in 1880 from the United States Artillery School.

Before leaving the latter institution he had already entered the United States Army, having been appointed Second Lieutenant in the First Infantry in 1877 and serving in it until he left the artillery school, when he was transferred to the Seventh Cavalry. He remained in the United States Army until 1891, but was detailed as Professor of Military Science and Tactics at St. John's College, Fordham, from 1885 to 1890.

He entered the diplomatic service in 1895, being appointed Second Secretary of the American Legation at Berlin. In 1897 he retired from that post, and was appointed First Secretary of the American Legation at Peking. When Sir Claude MacDonald, the British Minister to Peking, organized the staffs of all the Europen legations of that city for common defense during the Boxer uprising, he made Mr. Squiers his chief of staff. For his work at this time Mr. Squiers was honored both by the American and British Governments. President Roosevelt appointed him Minister to Cuba in 1902, and Minister to Panama in 1905. There was some criticism of his sympathy with the liberal party of Señor Arias in Panama three years ago. He gave up his office there in 1909.

Mr. Squiers married Miss Helen Fargo in 1881. She died in 1886, and he married the daughter of Dr. William P. Woodcock in 1889. He was a member of the Union and New York Yacht Clubs of this city, and of the Metropolitan Club of Washington. His body will be brought to this country next week. The funeral services will be held in this city.

DE PACHMANN PLAYS.

Russian Pianist Gives a Recital After Four Seasons' Absence.

Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann, who was last heard in New York four seasons ago, is here again, and played yesterday afternoon for the first time. A large audience, enthusiastic and appreciative, listened to him in Carnegie Hall. Mr. de Pachmann has in no way changed his artistic ideals or his technical methods since he was last here; nor has he greatly enlarged his repertory. He still commands all his old marvel of "touch," his old magic of delicate, filmy iridescent tone, of sighing pianissimo, of purling, rippling passages, of clear articulation, to transform the piano into a celestial instrument. It is pretty, wonderfully pretty, ravishingly pretty, and it beguiles the senses of the listener in a way that hardly any other piano playing can do.

One of Mr. de Pachmann's most ardent admirers, Arthur Symons, has said that he gives you "not states of soul or of temperament, not interpretations, but echoes. He gives you the notes in their own atmosphere where they live for him an individual life which has nothing to do with emotions or ideas." He can be accepted thus as a sensuous delight, for a time; but such art before long cloys. It cannot pluck out the heart of any mystery, nor make the music with which it concerns itself truly beautiful or noble in any of the deeper sense that is attached to beauty and nobility.

Mr. de Pachmann chose in his programme yesterday, for the most part, music that submits graciously to his conceptions and methods; but there were a few of his numbers that did not quite fit them. Thus into Mendelssohn's "Rondo Capriccioso" in E, with which he began, he put a certain sticky tempo rubato that was probably far from Mendelssohn's idea of the rhythm and flow of his absolutely symmetrical measures, designed for absolutely symmetrical playing, although the transparent delicacy and fleetness of the music under Mr. de Pachmann's fingers were delightful. A couple of Godowsky's transcriptions of old-time music, a pastorale by Corelli, and an allegro by Domenico Scarlatti are most perfectly within Mr. de Pachmann's artistic purview. A "Tambourin" by Rameau, put down upon the programme, he omitted; but he added in its place Raff's "La Fileuse," music a trifle old-fashioned now, but blooming into a new life when touched by this artist. An etude by Henselt seemed hopelessly outmoded. With this exception it is all grateful and agreeable material to him as well as to his listeners.

His Chopin group was devoted mostly to the Chopin of smaller things, that, as Mr. de Pachmann plays them, need raise no doubts or the feeling of a loss of emotional power in his interpretation. Probably nobody plays Chopin's music more nearly as Chopin himself played it, in scale of conception and quality and subtlety of tone. Some may have wished for a greater dramatic power in the "Revolutionary" etude, Op. 10 No. 1, not necessarily more volume of tone; more passion in the prelude in D minor, and a more feverish intensity in that in B flat minor, which was the first of his two additions to the list. But the nocturne in F, the C major etude, the A flat ballade, the G flat etude, were flooded with beauty by Mr. de Pachmann's playing. He included in his list the mazurka in A minor that many consider spurious and, if genuine, a product of one of Chopin's weakest moments; but he even made that plausible.

After apologies expressed in elaborate pantomime and inaudible words, Mr. de Pachmann began his last group with the printed notes of the pieces before him on the piano. It comprised Rubinstein's so-called "Study on False Notes," which would be an amusing jeu d'esprit but for its inordinate length and unnecessary padding. Schumann's piece called "Ende vom Lied" from the "Fantaisie-Stücke," Op. 12, and Liszt's tarentelle, "Venezia e Napoli," whose brilliant and alluring bravura also suffers from too great length. It was a pity that he missed the spirit of Schumann's strongly individual and very musical little composition, and that he took it at a pace that made it entirely incomprehensible.

At the close there was the rush of misguided enthusiasts to the edge of the platform that seems to be a necessary feature of piano recitals at the present time. But Mr. De Pachmann allowed himself to be persuaded only to the extent of exhibiting to his admirers a remarkable technical tour de force—he played the "Revolutionary" etude of Chopin that he had already given in its original form, in a transcription for the left hand alone. The net result of this seemed to be to establish the fact that it sounded much better as Chopin wrote it.

The little Berkeley Theatre in West Forty-fourth Street became a German stock theatre last night when Josef Stein presented his company in a one-act farce and an operetta by Leo Fall. The theatre was crowded with friends of the new manager, and the enthusiasm was large. Mr. Stein was called upon for a speech at the end of the first piece, and he thanked his friends for the reception they had given his first attempt uptown.

The one-act farce, "Der Dieb," ("The Thief,") a satirical piece by Mirbeau, adapted into German by Max Schoenau, was put on first. The four characters were played by Carl Sauermann, C. G. Ackermann, A. W. Neuendorf, and H. Habrich.

The Leo Fall operetta was "Brüderlein Fein," a rapidly moving little comedy, with some unusually tuneful music. There were only three important characters in this, played by G. Olmar, Fritzi Loeber, and Iffi Engel.

The staging and the acting of the two plays were of high order. The small space at the Berkeley—to be called "Deutsches Comoedienhaus"—did not interfere with the successful placing of scenery and furniture, and the nearness of the audience to the actors assisted much in making the performances interesting.

It is the plan of the management to continue giving high-grade German drama and musical pieces here as long as the attendance warrants. On such nights that the theatre may be leased for other purposes the company will go to Newark or to the Bronx. Next Sunday performances will be given in the former place, and the Bronx will be visited next Wednesday.

MORRIS ISRAEL FOUND DEAD.

Morris Israel, a wealthy resident of Charleston, S. C., and until recently President of the Charleston Savings Institution, was found dead in his bed at the Hotel Somerset, in West Forty-seventh Street, yesterday morning. Mr. Israel was 75 years old, and heart disease is said to have been the cause of death.

The aged banker, since the death of his wife in 1896, spent the greater part of every year in this city. He arrived here Thursday afternoon, intending to remain for the Winter months, and, as was his custom, he took a room at the Hotel Somerset. Yesterday morning his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Samuel Israel, of 608 West 139th Street, called him on the telephone. There was no response, and the hotel clerk sent a bell boy upstairs. The bell boy found Mr. Israel dead in his bed. Dr. De Forest, a police surgeon, who lives at the hotel, said that he had been dead since 3 o'clock in the morning. The clerk recalled that Mr. Israel had retired about midnight, seemingly in the best of health, and in fact in a jocular mood.

Morris Israel was well known in all sections of the South, and was identified with every commercial movement of importance in the South Atlantic States, as well as with large philanthropic movements. Six sons and two married daughters survive him. Two of his sons are in business in this city and four in Charleston. One of his sons-in-law is President of the bank with which Mr. Israel was formerly associated. The body will be taken to Charleston for burial.

NEW HOME FOR THE FRIARS.

An important addition to the Times Square theatrical section will be the new home which the Friars will build early next year in Forty-eighth Street, just west of Sixth Avenue. The organization has been looking for a suitable site to erect a building of its own for some time, and yesterday it was announced that the property at 106, 108, and 110 West Forty-eighth Street has been purchased for about $125,000, and a twelve-story structure will be put up.

The cost of the new Friars home will be about $500,000. One of its features will be a small theatre, which will serve for the various entertainments and the theatrical frolics which in the past have attained wide celebrity in the theatrical world. Harry Allen Jacobs has been selected as the architect. In addition to the private theatre there will be a well-equipped gymnasium, swimming pool, and library, while the upper floors will be divided into apartments and rooms for members.

The property has been owned for some time by the Countess Lena Mankowski of Paris, and it was sold by the brokerage firm of Mark Rafalsky & Co. The present home or monastery of the Friars is at 107 West Forty-fifth Street.

Stella's Roomers

Miss Jeanette Gilder writes in "The Reader": "The sub-title describes the book, the astonishing story of a New York rooming house. It is all of that!"

Franklin Davies writes in "Brooklyn Social Life": "A droll narrative of transient life in New York. Laughable in every page; some rare secrets revealed."

Stella's Roomers is irresistible from start to finish and those who miss "Stella's Roomers" will live to kick themselves.

As the story of a landlady's life, as a description of the private affairs of a New York rooming house, we have had nothing more intimate or more thrilling than this very frank narrative.

TALK of the TOWN

By MRS. JOHN LANE. PARIS, SEPT. 30.—Latest Success.—Yet another American literary success in Paris—this time by way of London. Mrs. John Lane, though a Bostonian by birth and English by reason of her marriage with the learned John Lane, the Bodley Head publisher, is French in her wit and Parisian by adoption. ¶Her book, "The Talk of the Town," has been translated into French. I am very pleased because its wit and wisdom are especially directed against the Tyranny of Clothes and the Plague of Monuments. For in Paris, more than anywhere else, we suffer from too much attention to our garments and too numerous monuments. Your dashing Bostonian reminds us that one has to be a very great man to survive one's own monument.—MARQUIS DE CASTELLANE, Special Correspondent of New York American. SPECIAL CABLE TO NEW YORK AMERICAN.

TWELVE books—of the greatest possible variety—have been selected from our Fall list of 60 titles for the special attention of New York Times readers—for their pertinency and immediate interest. We have made a feature of timeliness this season, and feel that we are very fortunate to be able to offer so many volumes of more than passing value. Every book on this page is the vital kind that the purchaser is proud to keep permanently in his library.

THE BLOOD OF THE ARENA. By SENOR VICENTE BLASCO IBANEZ.

Translated from the Spanish by Frances Douglas. To those who aim to keep up with the contemporary novels of the leading European writers, this admirable translation of "Sangre y Arena" will prove of extraordinary interest. Generally admitted to be the most representative work of Spain's greatest novelist, its power, its fascinating realism, and its splendid literary art make a profound impression on the discerning reader.

THE FOURTH PHYSICIAN. By MONTGOMERY PICKETT.

The charm and quality of this little story is so rare and elusive that it is almost impossible to put it into words. Since "The Christmas Carol" there has hardly been a more beautiful and sympathetic interpretation of what is called the "Christmas Spirit." Mrs. Elia W. Peattie says that "a mystic note of humanitarianism is struck which reaches somehow down to the roots of the emotions."

Illustrated in color. $1.00 net.

FIFTY YEARS OF PUBLIC SERVICE. By HON. SHELBY M. CULLOM.

Senator Cullom begins his book with his early experience as a lawyer and covers his fifty years of public services, during which he has been associated with nearly every public event and hundreds of men of National fame. He has been Chairman of the Senate Committee of Foreign Relations for the past ten years, and in his narrative he reveals many interesting matters pertaining to important treaties and agreements with other nations entered into under his guidance.

Illustrated. Boxed. $3.00 net.

A MOTOR FLIGHT THROUGH ALGERIA AND TUNISIA. By MRS. EMMA BURBANK AYER.

Very few books are to be found, except in French, treating of these exceptionally interesting countries. This is an exceedingly valuable book, written by one who has traveled very extensively and who has tried to incorporate within its covers just what a motor tourist would want to know regarding these regions. The beautiful illustrations are as important a feature as the text.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON IN CALIFORNIA. By KATHARINE D. OSBOURNE.

Mrs. Osbourne—Robert Louis Stevenson's step-daughter—has written an account of the famous writer's sojourn in California, his work there and the place of California in his life. From the fullness of her knowledge gained as an editor of his work she throws fresh light upon many of its phases.

Illustrated. $2.00 net. Large paper edition, $3.50 net.

THE COMING CHINA. By JOSEPH KING GOODRICH.

A valuable and scholarly book dealing with all phases of the question—a question which is likely to dwarf all others in a very short time. Professor Goodrich speaks with authority as a resident in the Far East for over 25 years.

THROUGH THE HEART OF CANADA. By FRANK YEIGH.

"A magic carpet for Canada" this book has been called by a writer in The New York Times, who goes on to say, "to read the book is to take an extended trip from Nova Scotia to the Coastal cities of British Columbia, without any of the annoyances of travel and under a most thoroughly instructed and painstaking guide." It is hardly necessary to emphasize its extraordinary timeliness.

THE MODERN RAILROAD. By EDWARD HUNGERFORD.

The aim of this comprehensive book is to show not only the practical workings of the modern railroad, but also to bring out the romance of it. Mr. Hungerford has followed railroading all his life, and what he writes is facts as he has seen and understood them. Told in a simple and direct manner, the text is further made plain by a remarkable set of railroad photographs.

In outer form this prophecy of to-morrow appears to be a jest, a merry notebook of a holiday recreation; in essence it is an affectionate revelation of a man's soul who believes in liberty and the triumph of truth. Read his message, and you will discover a reverent scholar whose style is so brilliant and charming that you may think him a man of the world; and he is—a man of our best world.

A GARDEN OF PARIS. By ELIZABETH WALLACE.

The intimate home life of a typical French family is set forth in Miss Wallace's little book in the most charming way imaginable. It is like a series of pictures from Thackeray. Madame, the hostess, la petite Grand'mere, Philippe, the sister Placide, all become living personalities and the reader is taken into the little circle as one of them. And the Garden—where are there such gardens as in Paris? Miss Wallace is known to a wide circle through her connection with the University of Chicago, and her little book cannot but add to her literary reputation.

ABROAD IN A RUNABOUT. By A. J. AND F. H. HAND.

The inspiration of this extremely practical little book, according to its authors, was their thought of the many small car owners, "who, for want of first-hand information as an impetus, were losing what the Summer was bringing to us, and by a plain, unadorned tale to convince those who hesitate that a tour of Europe can be made with only a small car and within the expenditures of the usual trip abroad."

THE WOMAN MOVEMENT IN AMERICA. By BELLE SQUIRE.

Explaining briefly the meaning of the Woman Suffrage Movement, this little book is meant for the busy reader who has no time for more than a short account of the struggle of women for political freedom. The author has succeeded admirably in conveying a better understanding of the meaning of "Votes for Women" in the widest and most comprehensive sense.

New Novels Worth Reading

THE FOLLOWING OF THE STAR

By FLORENCE L. BARCLAY, Author of "The Rosary," Etc.

A beautiful Christmas love story, instinct with the same depth of feeling, glowing imagery and refinement of literary art as The Rosary, and told with all the power and sweetness which won for Mrs. Barclay's other two books their place in the front rank of recent fiction. Of The Rosary and The Mistress of Shenstone 500,000 have been sold.

A WEAVER OF DREAMS

By MYRTLE REED, Author of "Lavender and Old Lace," Etc.

With Frontispiece in color by E. G. Learned. Cloth $1.50 net; full red leather $2.00 net; Antique Calf $2.50 net; Lavender Silk $3.50 net.

Myrtle Reed now ranks with the two or three leaders of modern American fiction writers. Her new book—a delightful love story—shows the same power of characterization, the same charm of fancy and the same delicate sense of humor which distinguish her earlier books.

LOVE IN A LITTLE TOWN

By J. E. BUCKROSE, Author of "Down Our Street," etc.

With Colored Frontispiece. $1.35 net.

The story of a girl who, having led a sheltered life in a luxurious home, is suddenly thrust into the Land of Reality, where there are not only hard experiences and the rough knocks that discipline character, but crowning joys and triumphs of life as well.

"THE BEES"

The Story of the B. Triplets and Their Aunt

By ELLEN M. THONGER $1.35 net.

An attractive story of three sturdy, naive children, Bob, Burton and Bennie, triplets, and alike as three peas.

LOVE vs. LAW

By COLETTE YVER $1.35 net.

A translation, by Mrs. Bradley Gilman, from the French, of Colette Yver's remarkable and brilliant novel, treating of the new woman question and the divorce question, in France to-day.

Besides the unusual situations and the wonderful portrait gallery of men and women lawyers, there is a fascinating love story running through the novel and compelling the reader's closest attention.

THE LITTLE GREEN GATE

By STELLA CALLAGHAN 8 Illustrations. $1.35 net.

A love story full of beauty and charm. Through the gate that leads to Nina Maynard's garden retreat, love all unconsciously entered one day, but before the gate had clicked upon his retreating elfine form, he had set in motion the drama which is the drama of the ages, the impulse of soul to soul, with the joys and heartaches that go with it.

VAGABOND CITY

By WINIFRED BOGGS $1.35 net.

A book that presents a hero of an independent stamp, one who will not accept the humdrum standards that content the majority and who lives a life free, intense, and untrammeled. Between him and his wife—a typical commonplace, small-souled individual, who is an embodiment of the conventions—comes the other woman, the dream woman.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

STEEL DOMINATES TRADING

A good deal of strength was displayed by the stock market yesterday. The movements were somewhat unsettled in the early trading, for after a strong opening setbacks occurred in some stocks, but this ground was made up, and in the later hours of the session an upward movement of considerable vigor carried prices well forward. The trading in United States Steel, so far as the volume of transactions was concerned, dominated the market, and its strength was unquestionably a factor of much importance in shaping the market sentiment of the day. The steps upon which the corporation decided this week are being accepted as an indication of its willingness to withdraw from a position which has come under official criticism, and this is rightfully being taken as a favorable development in corporation affairs. There is lacking sufficient evidence to indicate that the strength of the market was predicated on any material increase of outside interest in Stock Exchange affairs, but the course of prices reflected, nevertheless, a more confident attitude in respect to the immediate market position. Of late the extreme ease in money has been one of the factors to which the stock market has paid relatively little attention so far as its own internal affairs are concerned, but the continuance of ease such as this centre has for a considerable period, and is still experiencing, naturally facilitates the operations of any who turn their attention to the long side of the market after such declines as those which took place between the beginning of July and the close of September. This in itself would account in part for such strength as the market has been displaying.

There was no modification yesterday of the indication of continued ease in money, for not only was the estimated loss of the banks on the week's currency movements very small, but the outward movement of money to Europe, than which no greater proof of the ease at this centre could be had, continued unabated. Predictions which had long been current were fulfilled in the declaration yesterday of an initial dividend of 1¼ per cent. on American Beet Sugar common, the rate being larger by the fraction than that which had been commonly looked for. The stock responded to this dividend action with a net gain of 1 point, accompanied by considerable activity. Though regarded in themselves as isolated incidents, the two or three recent declarations of initial dividends, including that on American Beet Sugar yesterday, offer some offset in the shaping of market sentiment to the predictions of opposite import made in respect to the dividends of some other properties. To this extent yesterday's dividend declaration was doubtless a contributing factor to the day's forward movement of prices.

The long-continued hand-to-mouth policy pursued by the buyers of many lines of merchandise is apparently bearing fruit in the present situation, in the increased merchandise orders, though there is still no abandonment of the disposition to buy only for immediate requirements. The commercial agencies report some increase in trade, and current railroad earnings, so far as the fragmentary record goes, seem to bear out this suggestion of slight trade expansion, for the returns of the railroad gross earnings so far in October are slightly above those reported at this period a year ago.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE.

Increasing activity marked the upward progress of the market in the later dealings on the Consolidated Stock Exchange. Earlier in the day there had been a good deal of irregularity about prices, although the undertone showed firmness. The further advance in United States Steel common was particularly effective in stimulating bullish sentiment on the part of both commission house customers and room operators. Of the grand total of 97,220 shares, Steel alone accounted for 44,030 shares.

CONDITIONS OF TRADE.

Commenting on general business conditions, Dun's Review says:

Immediate requirements to replenish depleted stocks, coupled with lower prices, are mainly responsible for a continued increase in trade activity. The improvement is conservative, but it is steady, and it is noticeable in nearly every large trade centre. The large crop and early maturity of cotton, making for lower prices, is working a readjustment in the cotton goods trade on the basis of increased activity. The result is a resumption of operations in mills that were idle and an increased production in mills that were working part time. Large sales are also reported in the wool market, and in the dry goods trade generally there is a quickened movement, which, although it may not have any far-reaching significance, is at least, for the time being, very cheering. The leather trade also displays a spirit among buyers of willingness to operate. Hides are active and strong. Railroad earnings in the first week of October increased 0.7 per cent.

Bradstreet's says:

Though the trade trends show little definite change, it is probably true that retail business in the larger cities has expanded in consonance with cooler weather and the advance of the season. Yet this improvement is by no means uniform, too much rain in the Northwest and along the Atlantic seaboard having hampered shopping, while low cotton prices have affected Southern trade and collections. Incidentally, the country districts as a whole report that retail business in this respect is rather slow. Returns as to jobbing and wholesale lines tell of a reasonable degree of activity in dry goods, furniture, shoes, and the like, but it is claimed that interior distributors continue to buy on a hand-to-mouth basis, though most purchases call for immediate shipment. Money is easy and rates are lower, but collections are not better than fair, as a whole, and in many places they are positively poor.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Advance in Beet Sugar.

American Beet Sugar sold yesterday at 59¾, the highest price it has ever touched, in commemoration of the inauguration of dividends. The declaration of 1¼ per cent. quarterly came as a surprise to most people, who had been led to believe that the stock would be put on a 4 per cent. basis instead of 5. As not infrequently happens in Wall Street, the stock sold off on the announcement of "good news." It opened yesterday at 58½, but after the publication of the news sold down to 57⅝. This resulted from the effort of a large number of holders, who had been carrying the stock for some time in anticipation of the delayed action on the dividend, to take their profits. Later on the stock rallied to 59¾.

Government Control of Securities.

The hearings held by President Taft's Securities Commission brought to light some surprising differences of opinion on the length to which the Government should go to protect investors. Francis Lynde Stetson, Chairman Stevens of the up-State Public Service Commission, Paul Cravath, Marvin Hughitt, President of the Northwestern, and Judge R. S. Lovett, Chairman of the Harriman roads, were opposed to the Federal regulation of capital issues, while Robert Mather, former President of the Rock Island; Walker Hines, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Atchison, and Frank Trumbull, Chairman of the Chesapeake & Ohio, favored Federal control. Most of the witnesses who were called condemned the practice of issuing stock as a bonus with bonds, and approved of the proposal to place a statutory limit on the minimum price at which railroad bonds could be sold. The suggestion that the sale of either stock or bonds for less than par be forbidden received little support, for the reason that most of the authorities believed that such a provision would tend to keep capital away from new and untried projects.

Better Copper Buying.

After holding out since early in the Summer copper consumers are reported to have taken about 100,000,000 pounds of copper this month, and the price of the leading selling agency has gone up to 12½ cents and better. Although the buying is a belated movement and a further increase in surplus stocks is expected in the next report of the Copper Producers' Association, the copper stocks on the Curb all made substantial gains. The monthly circular of the National Conduit and Cable Company, which follows the situation closely from the point of view of the consumer, lays special stress on this factor; pointing to the conclusion as inevitable that "no possible consumption in sight to-day can by any stretch of the imagination justify the reckless policy of overproduction now in force. It is now generally known that a large new production is soon to prove a very important factor in the copper situation. The mining enterprise of the United States has reached a stage where no uncertainty need be felt over the prospects of the copper supplies of the next five years."

Exchanges Improve Outside of New York.

The bank clearings of $3,104,332,245, reported for the week at the principal money centres of the country, represent gains, according to the figures compiled by Dun's Review, over both 1910 and 1909 if New York is left out of the consideration. The cities outside of New York show gains of 2.8 per cent. over 1910 and of 7.6 per cent. over 1909, whereas the comparison for the country as a whole is reduced by the decreased stock market activity here to a loss of 8.8 per cent. as compared with 1910, and one of 8.5 per cent. from 1909's figures. The New York clearings are 6.4 per cent. less than in the same week of 1910 and 15.5 per cent. less than in 1909.

Chinese Troubles Put Up Price of Silver.

After a rise of seven-eighths of a cent an ounce on Thursday, silver rose a further three-eighths of a cent yesterday, the quotations being now 25⅛d an ounce in London, the world's market, and 54⅜ cents here. These are the highest prices since Jan. 13 last. Dealers in silver explain the sharp advances as due to the elimination of China as a possible source of supply to advances which may occur in India or London. The revolution has apparently not only put China out of the way as a seller, but the coincident difficulties of the Chinese banks have stimulated the demand for hard money in Chinese trade, which would tend to make China a buyer.

Hospital Side of Railroading.

The annual report of the Chesapeake & Ohio contains some interesting data not often found in railway statements. This is a summary of the operations of the company's hospitals and Y. M. C. A. buildings. At first glance the figures make it appear that railroading on the C. & O. is a perilous calling, although the number of serious accidents would not look so large if compared with the total number of men employed. In the company's hospitals there were treated for illness last year 1,579 employes, and for accidents 447. In outside hospitals 87 sick and 47 injured were treated. Besides these, 7,670 employes were treated at hospitals for illness which was not serious enough to necessitate their becoming regular patients, and 2,705 were treated for injuries. Only 44 of these patients died, 13 of them of injuries. The company's Y. M. C. A. has a membership of 3,706, with an average daily attendance of 3,959.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Mosaic Hatpins Pay 85 Per Cent.—Duty on Beaded Curtains.

In overruling a protest filed by R. H. Macy & Co. the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday held that mosaic hat pins must stand duty at the rate of 85 per cent. ad valorem under the present Tariff act. The importers claimed them dutiable at 45 per cent., either as manufacturers of paste or of metal. The pins submitted in evidence consist of brass stems and elaborate bras heads made in the form of horseshoes in which are set imitation tourquoise inlaid with colored flowers made of enamel.

Judge Sharrets states in his decision that the board is competent to determine an issue of this kind when exhibits representing the merchandise are actually before the tribunal. In this case, however, only illustrative exhibits have been offered, and even they do not accurately represent the goods with respect to the percentage of brass and glass or paste contained in the merchandise. In any event, the decision says that even were the articles composed in chief value of brass, or if set with imitation precious stones, the Collector's classification was correct and must be upheld. The protest is overruled.

The board denied a contention raised by Butler Brothers for a reduction in the assessment made by the authorities on beaded bamboo curtains. They were returned for duty at the rate of 60 per cent. as articles composed in chief value of beads. It was claimed that the merchandise should be allowed to enter either as bamboo, or else as household furniture. Neither of these claims are regarded by the board as controlling in view of the fact that the beads are of greater value than the bamboo.

STOCKS OUT OF TOWN

DECLINES IN CHICAGO

On the Baltimore Exchange Cotton Duck 5s maintained their strength of the last day or two and made a further advance of 1 point, with the demand fairly good. A block of 3,000 shares of Houston Oil common certificates was absorbed at the recent prevailing price, 8½. Demand for good bonds is steady, but offerings of such at the prevailing prices are only moderate.

The arbitrage stocks constituted the most active end of the Boston market, though several of the copper stocks displayed a tendency toward firmness. In spite of reports of better export business in the metal, traders were inclined to regard the raising of the price of copper as a manipulative move. The Arizona Commercial reorganization plan was put into effect, but the stock barely moved, this being expected, on account of the assessment of practically $3 per share on a stock selling at less than 50 cents. Steel, which was the leader of the industrials, if not of the whole market, was quite firmly held around 60. American Telephone was also firm.

Price changes on the Chicago Stock Exchange for the most part were slightly lower than on Thursday, though alterations were slight. An exception was Title and Trust, which rose several points. A fractional advance in Swift & Co. and some rise in Can preferred were among other important improvements, but Booth Fisheries preferred, Pneumatic Tool, Can common, Commonwealth Edison, and the Chicago Railways certificates sold off from yesterday's closing figures.

Deposits of Chicago Subway stock and bonds with the National City Bank of New York under the plan of reorganization are said to be coming in satisfactorily; but thus far the small holders of the securities, and especially of the stock, have been slow. Interests here believe that more of the small holders will come in next month. They have until Nov. 15 to make deposits, and as is usualy the case in such matters, there is a disposition to wait for possible developments. There has been a fair amount of trading in Subway stock around 1⅛@1¼ lately, and the purchasers in not a few instances have been identified with former speculative inside interests. Comparatively little tradnig has occurrred in the bonds.

Interest on the Philadelphia Exchange during the greater part of Friday's session was chiefly concentrated around the United States Steel post. An unusually strong opening brought forth an avalanche of selling orders, which quickly sent the quotation tumbling a full point. Later, complete recovery was established, when the general market turned strong in the afternoon. A new high record was made in General Asphalt at the close, when the quotation crossed 37.

Yesterday's transactions on the various out-of-town Exchanges, as reported to THE NEW YORK TIMES, were as follows:

COMMODITY MARKETS.

WHEAT.—Wheat made strong advance, gaining 1c to 1⅜c per bushel, closing a little under the top, but with a very firm tone. The advance made new high levels for the season in all markets. The advance was influenced again largely by the cash situation and growing confidence in the American cash position. The insisting by the bulls that the American markets are on a domestic basis seems to be having influence, while the control of the large cash wheat stocks in sight is so complete that the large cash stocks are a bull factor rather than a bear. Higher interior cash markets were reported with advancing cash premiums, and there were further reports of good interior milling demand. The Northwest receipts were somewhat larger than last week, and there was an increase of 815,000 bushels in the Minneapolis stocks. The Winnipeg receipts were heavy—815 cars, against 526 cars last week—but the quality of the receipts is very unsatisfactory. A report by a Chicago house covering returns from the Canadian Northwest claims that only 52 per cent. of the area harvested has been threshed, the balance being in shock and exposed to further damage. Of the estimated crop of 178,529,000 measured bushels it is claimed that the equivalent in bushels of weight, owing to the inferior quality, will be 133,000,000 bushels, of which only 115,000,000 bushels will be milling wheat. The Canadian requirements will consume all but about 65,000,000 bushels, it is claimed, which would give barely 10,000,000 bushels more export surplus than last year. Bradstreet's exports were 2,542,000 bushels, against 3,726,000 the previous week; Australian exports 912,000 bushels, against 1,176,000 bushels; Indian, 344,000, against 584,000; Argentina, 624,000 bushels, against 472,000 bushels, and the estimated world's exports were only 9,100,000 bushels, against 8,500,000 bushels the previous week and 13,800,000 bushels last year. Cash wheat was strong. Exporters reported four loads of Canadian wheat. No. 2 red was quoted $1.04, free on board; No. 1 Northern, $1.20⅝; No. 2 hard Winter, $1.13; No. 1 Manitoba, $1.12⅜.

CORN.—The corn market was very strong, with new high levels made, the market closing at the highest of the day and at a net gain of 1⅜c to 1½c. There was active covering of shorts and a good general commission house demand. Cash corn again led the advance with pronounced strength shown in old corn in all markets. The receipts of corn for the day were nearly 500,000 bushels at Western points, but the demand for old corn is so general that the receipts are having very little influence on the cash corn situation. The advance in the cash premiums carried prices to the highest level on the crop. There was some export demand about 100,000 bushels, new crop, forward loading. An exporter just back from the other side claims likelihood of continued demand, owing to the serious shortage in the European feed crops and the short corn supplies in other countries. Cash corn was strong, with No. 2 81c, free on board.

OATS.—The market was quiet and firm, influenced by the advance in other grain. Trading is without much feature, and is mainly for cash interests. Spot oats are firm, with standards and No. 2 white 53c and No. 2 white 53½c.

PROVISIONS.—Trade in hog products was of fair volume, the market showing considerable strength and held most of the gain. The advance seemed to be on fear of the later hog supply and covering of shorts. The hog receipts for the day were 82,000 at Western points, with the interior markets from 5c to 25c lower.

COTTONSEED OIL.

The feature of the session occurred near the close, when market orders to buy about 3,000 barrels of October resulted in an advance in that month of about 40 points. It was thought that the buying was for foreign shorts. Previously in the day there were tenders for 2,000 barrels of October circulated, but these were readily stopped without dislodging speculative holdings. Aside from the little influence which the abrupt advance in October had on the list, the firmness of lard was a factor, while claims were made that soapmakers were showing an improved inquiry for off grades of oil. Crude was higher, with sales reported at 4.40.

COTTON.

Pressure emanating from bear interests was noticeable at different times during yesterday's session, with considerable selling for the account of recent buyers, but it was evident that offerings from the South of actual cotton and hedge pressure was in smaller volume, while on the small setbacks the inclination to accept profits was sufficient to result in the maintenance of a steady undertone. There were opening advances in the market of from 1 to 5 points, and subsequently the list declined a few points under Thursday's finals, but the tendency of values was to gradually improve to a slightly higher plane.

An improvement in the character of Eastern spot advices was not without influence. The interior movement of cotton shows a falling off, while port receipts were approximated only 75,000 bales yesterday, or slightly in excess of last season, which is not particularly heavy, the optimistic crop advices being taken into consideration. Obviously this is partly due to the holding tendency at present, although it is still claimed that were the demand of larger proportion cotton would be drawn upon to a greater extent. The improved inquiry reported in the Eastern belt resulted in slightly higher spot quotations, with the opinion that foreigners were the principal buyers, although Eastern and Southern mills were exhibiting greater interest at the current levels. From west of the river the tenor of spot dispatches vary more than from other localities, but withal there has been no general tightening of offers.

Precautionary buying by shorts, due to official forecasts again of frost in Oklahoma and Arkansas, was witnessed, but as on previous occasions, the nervousness as a result of these predictions was not reflected in any substantial buying of futures. The expectation of frost for over Thursday night failed to materialize to an appreciable extent, and despite the fact that temperatures were slightly below the normal the prevalence of settled weather led to a rather bearish construction being placed upon the weather map.

Liverpool cables were again good, with spot business in fair volume abroad. These advices were instrumental in the early steadiness, and the increase in the demand from Continental sources was encouragingly regarded. Some tenders in the local market of October resulted in comparative heaviness in that option for a time, but the absence of an important long interest in that month was apparent. The week-end figures were about as expected, the into-sight as reported by the local Exchange totaling to 640,000 bales, against 647,000 last years, (the largest for any week on the last crop,) and 625,000 in 1909; since Sept. 1, 3,319,000 bales, against 2,910,000 and 3,246,000 respectively. The visible supply of American cotton is 2,554,000 bales, against 2,216,000 last year, showing an increase of 301,000 for the week, against 336,000 last year. Spinners' takings were 330,000 bales, against 289,000 last week and 311,000 in 1910.

EXCLUDE COTTON BILLS.

National City Bank Won't Accept Any with Identifying Marks.

Vice President J. E. Gardin of the National City Bank has notified customers that after Oct. 28 the bank will buy only such cotton bills as do not in the text or margin contain any reference to documents or merchandise. It is the custom of shippers to put an identifying mark on each bill of lading and draft corresponding to their private marks on the bales of cotton shipped.

This action by the National City Bank is taken to be the result of a decision by Judge Noyes of the United States Circuit Court in over-ruling a demurrer offered by the Guaranty Trust Company to the suit recently brought against it by Anthony S. Hannay of Liverpool. Hannay purchased 100 bales of cotton from Knight, Yancey & Company, and the Bank of Liverpool honored their draft for the price agreed upon. The cotton firm attached a forged bill of lading to the draft, which bore the letters RSMI to identify the cotton supposed to have been shipped to Hannay. In refusing to sustain the Guaranty Trust Company's demurrer that Hannay did not make out a cause for action, Judge Noyes stated that "it is conceded that if the draft in question had been a plain draft, i. e., if it had contained no reference to the cotton which the spurious bill of lading purported to represent, the plaintiff could not recover."

The National Park Bank has taken similar action toward cotton bills. The Bank of Montreal has followed this practice for a number of years. A representative of the Guaranty Trust Company said yesterday that his institution would continue to follow the old method and would not differentiate against drafts bearing identifying marks. Other institutions are sending copies of lading bills attached to drafts received by them to the Central Bureau recently established in New York by the Liverpool cotton buyers, for the purpose of comparison with duplicate bills sent to the bureau by the railroads. The National City Bank, Guaranty Trust Company, and several other institutions have refused to make use of this bureau.

CRAM'S REPORT TABLED.

Commissioners Want More Time to Study Electric Storage Car Question.

For the first time since Commissioner J. Sergeant Cram, who is considered to have introduced an entirely new element into the Public Service Commission, took his seat, he came to an open rupture yesterday with his colleagues. For some time he has been presiding at a hearing on the proposed use of electric storage cars by the Dry Dock, East Broadway & Battery Railroad Company on its First Avenue and Avenue B lines. The last session was on Thursday. Yesterday morning he presented his report to the Commission at its regular meeting, and moved the immediate adoption of an order authorizing the use of the cars.

Commissioner Maltbie objected on the ground that he had not yet read the evidence, and wished to have an opportunity of knowing on what he was voting, unless there was special urgency.

Mr. Cram pointed out that Receiver Whitridge has been running the cars since Oct. 1, and Chairman Willcox, referring to the experiments on the Twenty-eighth Street Cross-town line, interjected:

"Oh, for more than a year."

"That receiver considers he can do anything, regardless of law," said Mr. Maltbie.

Mr. Willcox contended that though, as Mr. Cram had said, the matter was only a change of motive power, it was important to be sure that no perpetual franchise be secured by back-door proceedings.

"I move the matter be laid over," said Commissioner Eustis.

"Are you agreeable?" asked Mr. Willcox of Mr. Cram.

Later in the day the commission sent to Attorney General Carmody a letter to impress on him the public importance of pressing legal proceedings for the removal of disused tracks, and the forfeiture of unsed street railway franchises. The danger to traffic of the old tracks was specially dwelt upon.

HEINZE ANSWERS SUIT.

Arthur P. Heinze filed yesterday in the United States Circuit Court an amended answer to the suit brought by John W. McKinnen, agent for the shareholders of the National Bank of North America, for $21,908, the interest alleged to be due the banker on two notes. In his answer, Heinze asked judgment for $275,000.

There were two notes, one for $100,000, made in 1906, the other for $150,000, made in 1907. Half of the first was repaid on June 25, 1907, Heinze says, who gives his version of the transaction in which the notes figured.

He says he delivered the second note to Charles W. Morse, with 500 shares of the Chase National Bank and 2,000 common of the United Copper Company, and without his knowledge or authority the Chase Bank shares were pledged by Morse with the Metropolitan Trust Company. This note was later taken up with the proceeds of the Chase stock and other securities put up by Morse.

The Chase stock, Heinze alleges, came back into Mr. McKinnen's possession, and he wrongfully converted it to the use of the Bank of North America, causing him, he says, a loss of $275,000. Heinze also asserts that he sold on Jan. 25, 1907, to Morse 17,200 shares of United Copper, on the understanding that they were not to be sold for two years, or pledged, that there might be no depression of the value of the securities. Nevertheless, Heinze alleges, Morse did pledge the stock, thereby depreciating its value and causing him to lose $200,000.

BOND INQUIRY ABOUT DONE.

President's Commission Likely to Recommend Regulation of Security Issues.

President Taft's Stock and Bond Commission, consisting of President Arthur Louis, Frederick Straus of New York, Walter L. Fisher of Chicago, and Prof. H. B. Meyer of the University of Wisconsin, met in this city yesterday for a discussion of the matters to be embodied in the forthcoming report to be made to the President. The commission will meet again this morning, and hope to agree upon recommendations bearing upon Federal regulation of the issuance of railroad stocks and bonds. If to-day's session proves to be the last the commission's report will be sent to the President in about two weeks.

The commission organized Nov. 28, 1910, and has held a number of public hearings in various cities to get the views of representative men on Federal and State regulation of railway capital issues.

A BEET SUGAR DIVIDEND.

High Prices Let American Co. Put Common Stock on 5 Per Cent. Basis.

One of the results of the high price of sugar was the determination of the Directors of the American Beet Sugar Company yesterday to inaugurate a 5 per cent. dividend on the common stock, which has hitherto received nothing. The first quarterly payment of 1¼ per cent. will be made Nov. 15.

A dividend on the common stock had been looked for, and it occasioned little surprise. The company's earnings this year promise to be the largest since its organization in 1899. There was a surplus last year, after the preferred dividend, equivolent to 11 per cent. on the common, and indications point to a considerable increase in the current year owing to the harvesting of a record crop in California. The common stock sold up to 59¾ after yesteruay's meeting, making a new high record.

THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Hub Building at Forty-second Street and Broadway to be Built by Western Capital—New Home for Friars in Times Square Section—Many Bronx Deals.

Times Square was again the centre of interest in the realty market yesterday. In addition to the purchase by the Friars of a plot in Forty-eighth Street near Sixth Avenue for its new home, it was learned that new interests and new capital have been obtained for the erection of the Hub building on the northest corner of Broadway and Forty-second Street, directly opposite the Times Building, and that this long-delayed office structure is now assured of being carried to completion.

The new interests, which will now practically have control of the operation, are represented largely by the Thompson-Starrett Company, and the new capital has come from Chicago capitalists. Herbert T. Jennings, President of the old Hub Building Company, it is understood, retains his interests in the new syndicate. The C. L. Gray Construction Company, which was interested in the project when first advanced, is no longer connected with it. The Gray Construction Company erected the Cohen Theatre and the twelve-story building on the Fitzgerald plot on the Forty-third Street corner adjoining the Forty-second Street corner, the latter being leased from the Trustees of the William Astor estate.

Financial difficulties overcame the construction company, and the old interests secured an extension of time from the Astor estate last Summer, as August had originally been the limit set for the beginning of actual work. It has been a question during the past two months whether the bonding companies which insured the erection of the structure to the extent of $400,000, would be compelled to put up the building or sacrifice their bond or whether outside capital could be obtained. It has required hard work to bring about the present satisfactory state of affairs and Louis J. Horowitz, President of the Thompson-Starrett Company, while not denying the interests of his company in the project yesterday, declined to go into any details.

The Hub Building Company and the Gray Construction Company, which erected the Fitzgerald Building, were, to a large extent, affiliated, and when the Hub Building Company was organized the plans of the Hub Building were modified so as to conform architecturally with the present Fitzgerald Building, only the Hub structure was to be twenty stories high.

The Hub Building Company took over the lease in 1909 on the Astor corner from the Broadway Corner Company, a subsidiary of the United Cigar Stores Company, which had been made for five twenty-one-year periods at a rate of $55,000 a year for the first term and increasing to $100,000 for the later periods. In turning over the lease the cigar company reserved the right to a small store on the corner. The Hub Company was incorporated at $2,000,000.

The new interests, it is said, have obtained consents from many substantial tenants to take large office space, so that the leasing of the structure is well assured, and actual work, it is understood, will begin in a comparatively short time.

Friars Buy Club Site.

The site which has just been purchased by the Friars for its new home is at 106 to 110 West Forty-eighth Street, a plot 61 by 100.5 feet, a short distance west of Sixth Avenue. The property was sold to the Friars by Mark Rafalsky & Co. for the Countess Lena Mankowski of Paris for about $125,000. Next May the three old dwellings on the plot will be torn down and a twelve-story clubhouse with a small theatre on the lower floors will be built at a cost of about $500,000.

AT THE LOWEST RENT IN MANHATTAN

LOWEST RENT IN MANHATTAN

are, (1) that the St. John's Park Realty Co. purchased the entire block, 200x200 ft., bounded by Greenwich, Washington, Morton and Barrow Sts., (opposite the U. S. Appraisers' Stores) at a price which was next door to a criminal offense. (2) The contract price for the eight-story buildings covering this block, obtained at the right time last Winter when New York's best builders were falling over each other to secure work, especially of a generous size, was also akin to an infraction of the laws of the land But—

"It's an ill wind blows nobody good."

The Washington St. half of the block, 200x100, we leased from the plans to the mail order firm of Bellas Hess & Co., who have migrated from Broadway and Prince St., by which move they save $45,000 per annum in rent. If it wasn't slang we would say that is "some saving." At any rate, there is a moral attached to it. On the Greenwich St. front we built two buildings, the northerly corner of which, (Barrow St.,) 101x100, we have just leased. We now offer the remaining corner, 100x95 ft., northwest corner Greenwich and Morton Sts., at the

LOWEST RENT IN MANHATTAN

The building is eight stories and high, dry basement; 100x95 ft., containing about 82,000 square feet; splendidly planned and built; excellent light; fireproof "az iz" fireproof; equipped with the fire-preventing, insurance-saving, business-protecting automatic sprinkler system; floors have the unusual carrying capacity of 200 and 300 pounds per square foot; three large Otis electric elevators of 4,000 pounds capacity each. Outside shipping platform 200 feet long; commodious interior and exterior stairways; underwriter doors and windows; steam heat, gas, electric light and power; ideal in every way. Convenient to all North River piers and ferries; the 9th Ave. "L" and Hudson Tunnel Stations at Christopher St.; 8th Ave., 9th Ave., Houston St. and 8th St. surface lines. Firms not needing all the 82,000 square feet in this building can readily sublet one or more floors, as did the General Electric Company, for whom we built and to whom we leased a similar building diagonally opposite. Tenants are numerous for these floors separately, but we will lease the building only as a whole. We will consider the assumption of unexpired leases elsewhere of prospective tenants. The rent of the building is $18,000 net per annum, and it is the

OBJECT TO TOBACCO PLAN.

Prosecutors of Three States Call It a Barren Victory for the Country.

After completing their study of the proposed plan of reorganization of the American Tobacco Company yesterday, Attorneys General W. T. Bickett of North Carolina, J. F. Lyon of South Carolina, and S. W. Williams of Virginia reached the conclusion that it "is not a substantial compliance with the judgment of the Supreme Court, and will afford no relief to the tobacco growers of the country," and that, in their opinion, "if this plan of dissolution should be adopted the victory of the Government would be a barren one." These conclusions were stated last night by Mr. Bickett.

The three officials decided to petition the Circuit Court this morning that they be permitted to file objections to the plan and to appear at the hearing on Oct. 30. They will base their application on the ground that they represent hundreds of thousands of tobacco planters in three States, which produce annually about 260,000,000 pounds of tobacco. If the petition is granted they will file a brief against the plan early next week.

At a meeting of the Independent Tobacco Salesmen's Association in Terrace Garden last night resolutions were adopted denouncing the Tobacco Trust, and declaring that the proposed plan will leave them in danger of being deprived of their livelihoods by the operations of the same interests as at present.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—Pressure continues high in the Northeast, while there has been a moderate fall in the Ohio Valley and the South. This has resulted in a continuance of easterly winds and unsettled weather in New England and the Middle Atlantic States, with local and very light rains. Over most of the country the weather was clear.

The high pressure area in the West has made but little progress, and the area of falling temperature has extended into the Ohio and Lower Mississippi Valleys, and to-night temperatures are from 5 degrees to 27 degrees below the seasonal average over interior districts from the Mississippi Valley westward.

Over the eastern portion of the country there was little or no change.

With the present pressure distribution over the east portion of the country it is probable that unsettled weather will continue for the next two days in New England and the Middle Atlantic States.

Temperatures will not change decidedly.

Winds along the New England and Middle Atlantic Coast will be moderate northeast to east; South Atlantic Coast, moderate northeast to east.

FORECASTS FOR TO-DAY AND SUNDAY.

Eastern New York—Unsettled Saturday, probably occasional light rains in eastern and southern portions. Sunday unsettled; moderate northeast to east winds.

New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania—Occasional rain Saturday. Sunday unsettled; moderate northeast to east winds.

3 A. M.	66	57	4 P. M.	68	60
6 A. M.	65	57	6 P. M.	68	59
9 A. M.	65	59	9 P. M.	67
12 M.	65	60	12 P. M.	63

This thermometer is 414 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 59; for the corresponding date last year it was 66; average on the corresponding date for the last thirty-three years, 54.

The temperature at 8 A. M. yesterday was 58; at 8 P. M. it was 59. Maximum temperature, 61 degrees at 4:30 P. M.; minimum, 57 degrees at 4:30 A. M. Humidity, 88 per cent. at 8 A. M.; 82 per cent. at 8 P. M.

He said that creditors had spent several thousand dollars in investigating the affairs of the company, and intended to take proceedings against some of those who had gotten the company's money. A petition was filed against the company on Jan. 18.

CUMMINS TO TELL ON STAND OF RUIN

HIS DEFENSE MADE PLAIN

Sets Up That $140,000 He Is Charged with Stealing Was Not a Trust Fund, as Prosecution Asserts.

William J. Cummins, on trial for the larceny of $140,000, advanced by the Nineteenth Ward Bank to take up loans of Warner Van Norden and Warner M. Van Norden in order to prevent its own stock, used as collateral, from being thrown on the market, will take the witness-stand to tell of the alleged "Wall Street conspiracy" which he declares resulted in his financial downfall. The nature of this alleged conspiracy, which had been only vaguely hinted at before, was partly disclosed toward the end of the cross-examination of Bradley Martin, Jr., who was on the stand all day yesterday. Max D. Steuer, Cummins's counsel, got it before the jury in a long question which he reeled off so quickly that Assistant District Attorney Frank Moss didn't get his objection in until it was finished. Then Justice Davis ruled it out. This was the question:

> Didn't Cummins tell you that he was to get $1,500,000 for his services as a broker in organizing the Independent Fertilizer Company, and that H. P. Davison of J. P. Morgan & Co. had sent for him and said he should take only $500,000 or Morgan would put him out of business—that $1,500,000 was too much—and that then he had gone to Clark Williams and J. J. Rollins and that they said to stand pat, but later, when the real test came, that both Williams and Rollins had gone back on him, had deserted him and gone over to Morgan?

Clark Williams was State Superintendent of Banks when the Carnegie Trust Company was closed. Jordan J. Rollins was counsel for the Banking Department and also personal counsel for Cummins. Further questioning brought this forth from Mr. Martin:

"During a conversation I had with Cummins he told me something about a $500,000 fee that he had made out of Morgan's office, and that this fertilizer deal was the first big thing Morgan had trusted Davison with, and consequently Davison was very sore because Cummins had outgeneraled and outwitted him."

"Didn't Cummins tell you that he did not get a cent of the $500,000?"

"No."

After the adjournment of court Mr. Steuer said Cummins had made arrangements with the interests which were going into the fertilizer deal by which he was to receive a fee of $500,000 from them; that he explained this to Mr. Davison, and proposed that he should also act for the bankers in getting them all in.

"Morgan & Co.," said Mr. Steuer, "had been willing to pay for certain concerns a large sum. Cummins proposed that he should continue the negotiations, and that of the difference between the price at which he closed with them and the price Morgan & Co. had been willing to pay he should receive a commission of one-third. Mr. Davison agreed to this and the agreement was put in writing. Cummins got the property for $4,500,000 less than the Morgan price. He was therefore entitled to a commission of $1,500,000, which with his fee from the other side would make $2,000,000. Mr. Davison thought this was too much for Cummins to make out of the deal."

It is expected that Mr. Davison will be called as a witness in the case. An effort was made last night to obtain his version of the transaction, but it was said at his residence that he was out of town and would not return until to-day.

Not a Trust Fund, Says Defense.

Aside from the alleged conspiracy the chief point made by the defense in the cross-examination of Mr. Martin was the contention that the $140,000 in question in the case did not constitute a trust fund, as asserted by the prosecution. The origin of this fund was this: The Van Nordens had loans in a number of banks secured by stock of the Twelfth Ward and Nineteenth Ward Banks. The loans were being pressed for payment. Martin and Cummins were both anxious to prevent the stock of these banks, which were allied with the Van Norden Trust Company and the Carnegie Trust Company, from being thrown on the market. The Nineteenth Ward Bank could not lend money on its own stock, so it was arranged that it should advance $140,000 on notes signed by Charles A. Moore, Jr., and the Merchants and Manufacturers' Securities Company, a Cummins concern, which the State contends was a company without assets holding the stock of other Cummins enterprises, also without assets. This money was to be used in paying off some of the Van Norden loans and redeeming the stock of the Nineteenth and Twelfth Ward Banks.

The charge of the prosecution is that this money was to be held in trust by the Carnegie Trust Company and that when the notes had been paid the stocks redeemed should be held in trust in the same way. It is charged that the money was never turned over to the Carnegie Trust Company but was stolen by Cummins and used for his own purposes. The defense takes the ground that the money did not constitute a trust fund.

In the direct examinatoin of Mr. Martin a letter to him as President of the Nineteenth Ward Bank from the Carnegie Trust Company, acknowledging receipt of the money and signed by Robert L. Smith, Vice President, was identified and introduced in evidence. This letter said:

> We agree to hold in trust for you or any trustees named by you, the above collateral as paid for by us at prices mentioned above. Whatever part of the above amount is not employed in the purchase of the above stocks shall be subject to your order.

The defense maintains that the stocks purchased, or in reality redeemed by the payment of the notes of the Van Nordens, was to be held in trust, but that there was no agreement that the money should be held in trust pending the payment of the notes and the redemption of the stock. What happened was that Cummins got more time on the notes of the Van Nordens. The State depends on oral testimony to show that the money was to be held in trust and that the letter was defective in expressing the agreement.

Mr. Martin testified that the money was to be regarded as a trust fund, according to his agreement with Mr. Cummins, and detailed the conversations on the subject. He declared that no different arrangement was discussed by himself and Cummins subsequently.

Mr. Steuer had read the minutes of the Directors' meeting at which the loans were authorized, and Mr. Martin admitted that there was no reference to any trust arrangement, and that the notes were treated just as if they had actually represented loans to Moore and the Securities Company. He also showed by the books of the Nineteenth Ward Bank, confirmed by Mr. Martin, that they were treated there in exactly the same way as any other loans. He brought out also that five months after the loans were made the Banking Department required that each be reduced by $8,000, not because of any objection to the loans themselves, but merely to reduce the amount, which was too high for the capital and reserve of the bank, the law limiting them to 10 per cent. as being unsecured loans. Mr. Steuer's point was that if the money loaned on them was a trust fund, they were in reality secured loans and would come under the limitation of 25 per cent., which would make it unnecessary to reduce them.

"Did you ever show the Banking Department the letter from the Carnegie Trust containing the alleged trust agreement?" Mr. Steuer asked.

Mr. Martin said he had not.

"Did you ever make the claim that the money was held in trust and not really loaned to the makers of the notes to anybody in writing before these banks were closed?"

"I don't know that I ever did," replied Mr. Martin.

He explained that he did not regard the loans as secured, but loans that were to become secured when the stock was redeemed.

At this point it was brought out that the reason the banks were pressing for the payment of the loans of the Van Nordens was because of one of them being held up on Fifth Avenue and a large sum of money being taken from him by some women. The banks which held the loans disliked the ensuing notoriety, Mr. Martin said.

Q.—You believed these loans were very pressing? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—But five months passed without one of them being taken up? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Under the agreement you could have called for the money from the Carnegie Trust Company at any time? A.—Yes.

Q.—Why didn't you? A.—I asked Cummins several times if he had used the money to redeem the stock. He stated that he had not yet done so. He said he had prevented the necessity of using the money yet.

Q.—Then you believed the Carnegie Trust Company held the money subject to your order? A.—I believed we could call the loans at any time.

Q.—Up to September, 1910, you believed the fund was intact in the Carnegie Trust Company and was being held in trust? A.—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Steuer questioned the witness about a loan of $100,000 to H. B. Luce, whom Mr. Martin described as "a dummy of C. C. Dickinson." The loan was made before Cummins came to New York.

Q.—Could the $140,000 have been used to pay the Luce loan? A.—Yes, that could have been done under the agreement.

Q.—Did the Van Nordens have anything to do with that loan? A.—No.

Mr. Steuer obtained from Mr. Martin an admission that it was Cummins who saved the Van Norden Trust Company from being closed at the time it was acquired from the Van Nordens by the Dickinson syndicate. The trust company had been notified that the loans to the Van Nordens must be taken out.

"In order to take out these loans," said Mr. Martin, "money had to be raised by the Van Nordens, and it was decided to sell the controlling stock to the syndicate headed by C. C. Dickinson and use the money to take up the loans. Cummins had arranged in making the contract for this sale that the loans be taken out.

Q.—The Van Norden Trust Company would have been closed if Cummins had not made that stipulation? A.—Unless the money was raised somewhere.

Q.—If it hadn't been for Cummins in 1909 the Van Norden Trust Company would have been closed? A.—Yes, Sir.

To overcome the cross-examination as to the nature of the fund deposited with the Carnegie Trust Company, Assistant District Attorney Moss asked Mr. Martin:

Q.—Did you expect that anybody but the Trustee would be able to handle your money before the stock was bought? A.—No; nobody but the Trustee.

Q.—And the trustee was the Carnegie Trust Company? A.—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Martin also testified that it was understood that Percival S. Hill, Vice President of the American Tobacco Company, would take up the notes on which the Nineteenth Ward Bank advanced the $140,000. At one time Cummins told him Hill was preparing to take up the notes, he said.

Commuters Thought the Engineer Had Lost His Way.

Commuters aboard an express, which, on its trip each evening from Jersey City to Hackensack and beyond, travels over the New Jersey & New York Railroad, leaving the main tracks at Carlstadt Junction, were surprised last night when the train shot past the junction on the main track and through Rutherford.

First a rumor got about that the locomotive had run away, but all alarms were put at rest when it slowed down a few moments later and the train was switched to the Bergen Short Cut. Along this route it proceeded to Garfield, stopping there for a minute or more, and then was switched to the other track and started back the way it had come. By that time about every one on the train was satisfied that the engineer had lost his way in the maze of tracks. They finally got to Hackensack over the old familiar route, however, just thirty-five minutes late.

At the dispatcher's office in Jersey City last night it was said that a freight train, which was detained for some time at Berry's Bridge, just east of the junction, caused all the trouble. It was in order to get the commuters to their homes without a long delay that the train was send wandering.

ROBERTS LOSES DAMAGE SUIT

Hugh Roberts, architect of the new $3,000,000 Hudson County Court House, who sued for $25,000 damages Justice Charles L. Carrick, Joseph Anderson, Dr. Ulamor Allen, and Rudolph Rabe, the committee that instituted the Court House investigation, because they charged that he had drawn $25,000 illegally, lost his case yesterday in the Jersey City Circuit Court. Judge Speer, who took the case from the jury and ordered non suit, said:

"Even if the plaintiff shall have made out his case, the defendants have met it by their defense of privilege entirely by not only a preponderance of the proof, but by such an overwhelming preponderance of it that I would not permit any verdict to countervail it. And the plaintiff has not made out by any measure of proof that would be permitted to stand if a verdict were found in favor of him that personal spite, ill-will, or malice actuated these parties."

IN NEW JERSEY.

JERSEY CITY.—A carpenter's hammer and chisel were sent for by the Hudson County Grand Jury yesterday to assist in opening the primary election ballot box of the Seventh District of the First Ward of Jersey City, in which it is alleged that gross frauds were discovered in the tabulation of the votes for the Democratic nomination for Mayor. The carpenter's tools, however, were not used, as City Clerk Michael I. Fagen came to the rescue and opened the box without mechanical assistance. On primary night the vote was announced as follows: Mayor H. Otto Wittpenn, 93; former Appeals Justice Mark A. Sullivan, 64; James F. Omealia, 3; Robert Ambrey, 1; Anthony Hauck, 0. Affidavits were submitted that more than 144 persons said they voted for Sullivan. It is said that before the Grand Jurors got very far they came upon a condition of affairs that will probably lead to indictments.

SOUTH ORANGE.—James Ricalton, Jr., whose father is a well-known African hunter and explorer, resolved himself into a village Fire Department yesterday and operated two fire extinguishers at once, thinking that thus he was saving the life of a $10 Dalmatian pup he had just bought. The basket in which he had carried the pup suddenly burst into flame a few minutes after Ricalton had set it down in a store and was telling of the merits of the animal. After Jim had put the fire out he lifted the lid of the blackened basket and found it empty. The same person who had set fire to the basket had removed the pet temporarily to where it was safe.

HACKENSACK.—John Gibbons of Coytesville, who says he is a moving picture actor, was committed to the Hackensack Jail yesterday morning by Justice Manix of Fort Lee, charged with being one of a gang of four highwaymen who on Sunday night held up a Palisade trolley car near Fort Lee. The motorman and conductor identified Gibbons. He denies the charge.

HACKENSACK.—Having heard footsteps on his front stoop, Dr. George L. Edwards of Larch Avenue, Bogota, went out to investigate the cause of the noise at 10 o'clock last night. He found no one, but heard a faint cry that came from a bundle on the steps. To his surprise he found a male baby about two weeks old in the bundle and quickly took it into the house. The child has light hair and blue eyes and is well dressed. He was taken to the Hackensack Hospital.

TRENTON.—The State Department of Public Instruction has announced the programme arranged for several of the Teachers' Institutes, to be held during the next few months. Those arranged are: Monmouth County, at Freehold, Oct. 30; Union County, at Elizabeth, Nov. 3; Somerset County, at Somerville, Nov. 2 and 3; Camden County, Camden, Nov. 4. The annual convention of the New Jersey State Teachers' Association will be held in Atlantic City Dec. 27, 28, and 29. Among the speakers at the county institutes will be Dr. W. A. Stecher, Director of Physical Education in the public schools of Philadelphia.

ATLANTIC CITY.—The body of John Berry, who lives on a farm near Pleasantville, was found near the tracks of the third rail line near Pleasantville last night. Indications seemed to point that the man had been struck by a train and his body dragged some distance. He was not killed by the third rail electric current. None of the trains that came into the city reported striking a man, and how he came to be killed is still a mystery. He leaves a widow and four small children. The body is in the morgue at Pleasantville.

GIRL WAS A ROBBER, NOT ROBBER VICTIM

HER COMPANION IS HELD

She Tied Herself Up While Alone at Home and Said Gang Had Done It—Used Money to Travel.

Emma Mauermann, the sixteen-year-old schoolgirl of 169 West Ninety-ninth Street, who told, on Sept. 19, a remarkable story of having been bound, gagged, and threatened with a razor by four men to make her tell where $218, the savings of her parents, was hidden, was arrested yesterday morning and, the police said, admitted it was she who took the money and that the story of the four thieves was told simply to fool her parents.

With the girl when she was arrested, was James Connolly, 20 years old, chauffeur. He was arrested, charged with abduction. The two have been missing a week. The girl said she bought Connolly a $10 signet ring, a $20 watch, and gave him $100. The rest of the money went for railroad tickets, meals, and the pay of a valet named Miller, who, the girl said, traveled with them until their money gave out. The girl's parents were in the West Side Court when the couple was arraigned yesterday morning, and they made no objections to the law taking its course. The girl was ordered detained as a witness, and her father swore to the complaint against her companion.

Late in the afternoon of Sept. 19 a woman greatly excited rushed into the West 100th Street Station, followed by a mob of little children. The woman was Mrs. Mauermann, mother of the girl, and she told the Lieutenant that when she returned home a few moments before she had found the door locked. Hearing her daughter moaning inside, she went to the rear yard and climbing the fire escape entered a window. On the kitchen floor was her daughter, with a towel wrapped around her head and her hands and feet tied. Mrs. Mauermann released her daughter, who appeared to be weak from fright, and the mother said it was some time before she was able to tell her what had happened.

Finally the girl told her mother that four men had called at the flat, representing themselves as gas inspectors. When she let them in they attacked her and after binding her hands and feet told her they would slash her with a razor unless she told where the family savings were hidden. At first she refused to tell, the girl said, but when they tortured her she feared for her life and told them where the money was.

The detectives of the West 100th Street Station hurried to the flat, two blocks away, accompanied by Capt. Zimmerman, who had heard Mrs. Mauermann's story. The police found Emma in hysterics, and so skillfully did she act her part that they wanted to send for an ambulance and have her removed to a hospital. Capt. Zimmerman was a little skeptical, however, especially as the girl had said she had been cut with a razor. A razor was lying on the floor, but she had not a single cut to bear out that part of her story.

Capt. Zimmerman communicated his suspicions to Detectives Quinn, Donnelly, and Fay, who questioned the girl carefully and got from her a description of the four men. One day when the girl was away the detectives went to her room and found some letters from Connolly, and in one they got a clue that caused them to look him up.

Two days after this the girl went to Staten Island and remained away several days. When she returned the girl learned she was being watched. Wednesday of last week the girl packed some clothes, stole out of the house and was gone before the detectives knew it. After hiring a valet, she said, she and Connolly visited Rochester, Syracuse, Binghamton, Albany, and Boston, their trip ending in Newark last Wednesday.

The girl sent a postcard to a friend from Newark, and at the request of the detectives the girl to whom the postcard was sent invited the two to a party in this city Thursday night. When they stepped off of a ferryboat at Cortlandt Street the detectives arrested them.

The prisoners were taken to the West Sixty-eighth Street Police Station, where the police said the girl confessed she had stolen the money. She also said she and Connolly tried to get married, but were unable to get a license.

GAMBLING HOUSES RAIDED.

Two spectacular gambling raids were made yesterday afternoon by Inspector John Daly and his detectives. Warrants were sworn out early in the afternoon before Chief Magistrate McAdoo, and the Inspector himself led the attack on 86 Cortlandt Street, which the police say was raided a year ago. It is only a short distance from the Cortlandt and Liberty Street ferries, and is on the line of march of home-going commuters.

The detectives broke down two ice-box doors, and rushed up to the second floor. There seventy-five men were discovered in the alleged poolroom, and the police lined them up against the wall. They had five warrants to serve, but they picked out only one man, who gave the name of Thomas Barry, a clerk, of 196 Hudson Street. He was charged with aiding and abetting the keeping of the house, and the police said that he was the doorkeeper.

The police confiscated a pool table, racing charts, telephones, a klondike outfit, and a quantity of poker chips. The crowd that gathered in the street was so great that Lieut. Walsh had to be summoned with the reserves to send the commuters on their way home.

The other raid was at 92 Sixth Avenue, near Eighth Street, and was led by Lieut. Underhill. The house is a four-story building, the three upper floors of which, according to the police, were devoted to gambling. Ice-box doors resisted the attacking force successfully at the head of the first flight of stairs, and entrance had to be made through a second floor window.

Thirty men were in the rooms, and as the police entered they sat themselves around the room and tried to assume the air of club members engaged in serious conference. They forgot, however, to destroy the evidence, and the detectives say that they found a number of racing charts scattered about.

Magistrate Murphy, sitting in Jefferson Market Court, had provided the detectives with warrants. They arrested five men, and took them to the Mercer Street Station. They gave their names as Thomas Callahan, a salesman, of 210 West Tenth Street; William Jones, an agent, of 32 East Thirteenth Street; James Conlon, a clerk, of 94 Perry Street; William Reilly, a clerk, of 75 Bank Street, and Frank Burns, a clerk, of 209 West Fourteenth Street. Callahan was charged with keeping and maintaining a gambling house, and the others with aiding and abetting him.

Escape Fire by a Tree.

MINEOLA, L. I., Oct. 20.—Tenants of the Simonson building, in Front Street, were awakened early to-day by a fire that started in the cellar. By that time the stairs were ablaze, and their escape was cut off. The frightened tenants climbed out on their window sills and then swung themselves into the branches of a big tree growing beside the house. They scrambled down from limb to limb until they reached the ground. Several women made the descent, aided by their husbands.

WHITE SLAVE TRIAL CLOSES.

Both sides in the case of seventeen-year-old Eloise Wendt of Pittsburgh, who testified before Judge Warren W. Foster in General Sessions on Thursday that she had been sold into white slavery by Philip Solow of Pittsburgh, Penn., closed yesterday. The jury will get the case Monday.

Lawyer Hugo Levy asked Judge Foster to instruct the jury to disregard the newspaper accounts of the trial. Judge Foster consented, saying the jurors were under oath not to read anything about the case. Mr. Levy then asked the Court to inform the jurors that his conduct had been correct. Judge Foster consented to that, too, saying that the fact that he cautioned counsel several times to stop repeating questions should have no effect on the jury.

Assistant District Attorney Wasservogel called two witnesses to corroborate the girl's testimony. These witnesses were Lillian Roth, who testified that Solow went to her house on July 26 and demanded money from Eloise Wendt, and upon being refused beat her and other inmates of the place. Mrs. Jennie Roth corroborated this testimony, and added:

"During the first part of April Solow came to my house in Fifty-seventh Street and said he had a girl for me. One week later he brought around Eloise, and I gave her $1, which he took from her."

Mrs. Emile Ave of 41 St. Mark's Place testified that she had told Solow and the girl to leave her house because he brought so many men to see the girl, who, he said, was his wife.

Detective Owens was asked by Mr. Levy if he had received a visit from Abraham Kantel and a Mrs. Levetan. Owens admitted he had, and Mr. Levy asked him if it was not a fact that Mrs. Levetan had told him that the Wendt girl had admitted to her that she wanted to get rid of Solow because he loved her and followed her about.

"No, she did not say that at all," Detective Owens replied. "She told me that the complainant witness had sent Solow to jail, and said: 'I don't want to see Solow go to jail upon a decent girl's testimony, because he is one of my own kind.'"

Mr. Levy called Abraham Kantel, who testified that he knew Eloise Wendt. Solow himself took the stand and denied all the charges against him, and said he repeatedly offered to marry the girl.

On cross-examination he admitted to Assistant District Attorney Wasservogel that the letter the girl wrote to her parents in Pittsburg, saying she was sorry she left them, had never reached there because he had carried it around in his pocket. He said he did this because there was a blot on the envelope.
